1 Resume

The summary below focuses on the main lines. The connections in the Middle Ages are sometimes hypothetical because the available sources from that time are far from complete. After 1500, consistent family trees can be constructed (with a few exceptions). However, the family lines are extensive and cannot be compressed into a summary.

Hypothesis: ancient nobility as ancestors of the guardians of Roermond (Ch.3)

Sometime around 645 Theodosio was born. He is the ancestor of a whole series of descendants, all belonging to the ancient nobility. They don't have a real family name yet, but were referred to the area they ruled or lived in. If the line of descendants that possibly leads to the guardians of Roermond is followed, we see that the first 6 generations were Counts of Cleves. Balderic, who was born around 785, was count of Teisterband and about a hundred years later Ricfrid became count of the Betuwe. That county then remained in the family for 6 generations. Heinrich was born in 1053 and became Count of Wassenberg. His daughter Regewindis was the first person to use the name "van Ruremonde" as a family name. Her (possible) grandnephew Folmerus probably became the first guardian of Roermond. The merchant in Cologne with the same given name is probably a different person. The relationship between Folmerus and the guardians is uncertain.

Merchants in Cologne (Ch.4)

The descendants of Folmerus that didn't hold the title of guardian of Roermond, could be the ancestors of a large part of the name bearers living today. Around 1230 Folmerus possibly had a great-grandson by the name of Theodorus (3) gardian van Roermond. In 1399 a Johannes was mentioned in Cologne as the son of a certain Goedards von Roermond. That Goedards could be named after (his possible father) Gerlach, son of the gardian. Whether Jan was also a merchant is not stated in the deed. However, other documents show that at that time various name bearers were active in Cologne as a merchant. They also include a Johannes. Unfortunately we do not know whether this is the same person as Jan mentioned above. The Cologne merchants trade in 's-Hertogenbosch and Deventer and these cities form the origin for the current name bearers.

The genera Van Rumund, Van Remun(d)t, Van Ruremonde and Van Roermund (Ch.5)

The oldest mention of this family is Henricus van Rumunde. He was probably born around 1275 and already owned land in the city of 's-Hertogenbosch in 1342. He is probably the grandfather of Theodericus who was born around 1320. He became a rich merchant who lived in the Colperstraat in 's-Hertogenbosch and traded with Cologne residents. Because this house remained in the family, the relationship with the following generations of merchants can be established.

The spelling of the surname was still very variable in those centuries. Around 1550 Huijberts Jans van Ruremonde was born. In his second marriage to Margriet Potteij he had two sons and a daughter. The family tree splits into two main branches here. Son Igrom van Roermond is at the beginning of one branch (see § 5.4.2) and son Jan Huijbert van Ruremunde at the other branch (§ 5.4.1). The line of Igrom is called Van Romunt after four generations. The children of Gijsbertus Josephus van Romunt and Christianae Schuermans are called Van Roermund from 1800 onwards. They live in Oss.

The son of Jan Huijberts is called Huyberts Janssen van Roermondt he married Guertien Janssen van Roij van Strijpt. They leave 's-Hertogenbosch and moved to Sint-Oedenroden. Their son Jan Huijberts van Rurmondt was born in 1628 and married Maria Dircx Schoenmakers. They use the name van Remunt for their children. Five generations later, in 1761, Eijmbertus is born. He marries twice. First with Elisabeth van Straalen and then with Joanna Verbonts. In a deed he has his surname crossed out and calls himself Van Ruremonde from then on.

Het geslacht Remunde (H 6)

Kors is probably a son of Pieter. He is the ancestor of a family whose family members worked in construction. Most members lived in 's-Hertogenbosch but they also worked in other cities.

The genera Van Romunde and Van Romondt (Ch.7)

In 1376 Ruthger van Ruermunde settled in the Lange Bisschopstraat in Deventer. He was wealthy, but not of noble birth. His grandson Herman married Styne (§ 6.2). They settled in Zwolle where he worked as a canon. They had three sons; Deric, Andries and Johan:

1. The first son Deric had a child, Herman, who moved to Kampen. Three lines are distinguished in § 7.3. The descent of all lines are uncertain (≈)
 - a. Hendrick is probably a great-grandchild of Deric. He married Elisabeth and became a sheriff in Utrecht (§ 7.3.1). The male descendants mainly held administrative positions in the Hanseatic cities and often married women from the noble class. Their places of residence are mainly west of Deventer (in Holland and Utrecht).
 - b. Another line is that of Jan van Romunde who was born around 1730 in Deventer and married Hendrica Modder(s) (§ 7.3.2)
 - c. The last possible line is Henricus Romunde who was born around 1723 and married Marie Catherine Swinne. They lived in Maastricht (§ 7.3.3).
2. The second son was called Andries. He may have lived in Arnhem and may have had a son called Willem. Willem had a son Andries. She lived in Utrecht (§ 7.4).
3. The last son continued to live in Deventer. His name was Johan and he married Lyze (§ 7.5). In addition to many administrators in the most important cities of Gelderland and Overijssel, this family also provided several generations of mint masters in Zwolle, Friesland, Overijssel, Kampen, Utrecht and Enkhuizen in the seventeenth century. In the eighteenth century they worked as administrators in the Netherlands Antilles. Three main lines can be distinguished:
 - a. Jan who married Anna Schisters (§ 7.5.1). They moved to Doetinchem. A few generations later there is also a branch to Utrecht and a branch to Aalten and Brdevoort. This last line is headed by Hendrick who married Berentje van Aelten.
 - b. Herman who was married to Grieta Rademaickers (§ 7.5.4). Herman is a descendant of Herman (son of Johan) and Grieta (her mother-in-law coincidentally has the same first name). They lived in Deventer. A few generations later there is also a branch to Zwolle and possibly also Zutphen.
 - c. c. The last line is very uncertain (≈). It concerns Michiel Romondt (§ 7.5.5) who left for South Africa. He probably had no male descendants. His son was probably adopted, but they do bear his surname.

The genera Remunde and Romunde (Ch.8)

Around 1400 a certain Jacob van Ruremunde lived in Cologne with his wife Guetgyn. He may be the father of merchant Johan van Romunde, who was also called "the rich man". Johan lived in Deventer for a long time but later moved to Cologne. Both his sons remain childless.

The genus Ruremunde (Ch.9)

Jan van Ruremunde is the first mentioned name bearer in Venlo. Presumably all other name bearers in this city are descendants of him. Since he was probably born before 1385, he will not have been borne in Deventer. Cologne is the most likely origin because this city holds also name bearers with board positions. The lineage continues in Kalkar.

The genus Rumunde (printers) (Ch.10)

As to Genus of the book printers in Antwerp it is uncertain whether these persons belong to the other lineages of name bearers. It is most likely that they come from Roermond. Yet there are indications that they are related to their name bearers from Deventer.

2 Introduction

2.1 Meaning of the name

There are several hypotheses about the meaning of the word Roermond. The most obvious explanation that Roermond indicates the location where the Roer flows into the Maas is nowadays rejected because that location is much further south. However, it can be argued that the morphological maps show that the Roer used to flow into the Maas at the current city.

The name Roermond or Ruremonde is a compounded word. It consists of two parts; "Rure" and "Monde". "Rurea" (Rura, Rurae or Rure) probably has pre-Celtic or Germanic roots in the sense of rough or turbulent. It concerns a divine personification of the river Roer. A Roman temple (ca. 200 A.D.) that was dedicated to this goddess once stood near the current city Roermond. The Roer is mentioned for the first time in the beginning of the 8^e century in the Cosmographia of Anonymus Ravennas. The image on the right shows a picture of a sacrificial stone from that temple. Prior to this shrine, this location may have already functioned as a cult site in the late Iron Age (\pm 2,500 years ago).

"Monde" can mean several things:

- It is an old Celtic-Germanic word for bridge. "Roermond" could therefore mean the bridge over the Rura.
- "Monde" in Germanic could mean "protector". In old Norse this name is composed of two elements: hröpiR (praise, fame, glory, renown, honour) and "munduR" (protector, protection, tutelage, guardianship). In turn the name means "The one who protects glory and fame".
- In Latin, "mundium" refers to a fortified place. In the medieval spelling "Ruremunde" or "Roremunde", the word "mundium" is more recognizable. Roermond is, according to this statement, a fortified place on the river Roer.
- Another meaning is that it concerns an elevated place in a low-lying landscape.
- The most current view is that "monde" refers to the castle of a so-called guardian. In the Middle Ages guardians were appointed to rule parts of the country. The fortress of such a governor was also called "mint". Roermond (or medieval Ruremunde) then means the guardians castle on the Roer.

The meanings are an extension of each other. Elevated landscape elements near a river are excellent locations for observation and defense of an area. Later, such a location can be fortified and provided with a castle. The original word for elevation can thus evolve into a fortified place and then become synonymous with the castle itself. For a further explanation of the explanation of the name, I refer to M.J.H.A. Schrijnemakers who has made an extensive analysis of the name Roermond. [See § 12.2].

The family name "Van Roermund" is a toponym; a name referring to someones origin. These are names derived from a geographical name such as an estate, a village or a city. In this case it is a reference to the city of Roermond. The city is first mentioned as a location in the Balderik charter from 943 in which parts of the later city (such as Rura) are mentioned. In 1130, Ruremunde is mentioned in the Annales Rodenses and in 1180, castrum...Rurimundum is mentioned as a castle settlement on a hill owned by the Dukes of Limburg. In 1189 it was owned by the Count of Guelders and in 1204 allodium...Ruremonde was transferred as a fief to the Bishop of Liège. In 1213, Emperor Otto IV destroyed it. The Munster Abbey was founded in 1218 on the initiative of Count Gerard IV of Gelre. He granted Roermond city rights between 1224 and 1224

For the identification of people in official documents, their origin was often stated if they came from elsewhere. Later on this often resulted in the formal surname. So people with the same surname do not necessarily have to be related. The first person whose surname refers to Roermond is the noblewoman Reinwids de Ruregemunde (\pm 1130). According to unverifiable sources, she is said to be the old aunt of Foldemerus who may have been the first guardian of Roermond. The document in which Foldemerus is mentioned is the oldest document that refers to the city of Roermond (see chapter about the guardians of Roermond).

2.2 Frequency of name variants

Various variants of the family name were used in recent centuries. The frequency table of the name variants is based on archive research on the family name (reference year 2017). The column "Total" indicates the number and percentage that a name variant occurs. For the column "<1550", I looked at attributions older than 1550. As indicated before, the name consists of two parts. The second part of the name starts with the letter "m" and is followed by either a "u" or an "o" (for example, Ruremunde or Ruremonde). Then follows the letter "n" with one of the following endings: -de, -d, -dt, -t. For the sake of brevity, the table only mentions the name with the ending "-de". However, the observations of the names with the other endings are included. (For example, the row "Ruremunde" also contains the observations for the names "Ruremund, Ruremundt and Ruremunt"). The prefix "van" (and sometimes "de") has also been omitted from the table. Some transcribers convert names from Latin to Dutch or regional variants, causing the original spelling to be lost. This affects the table below.

..mUn..	< 1550	Total		..mOn..	< 1550	Total
..(de/d/dt/t)	%	number	%	..(de/d/dt/t)	%	number	%
Remunde	25.9	737	14.5	Remonde	1.2	34	0.7
Roermunde	0.9	506	9.9	Roermonde	18.8	366	7.2
Rueremunde	2.5	21	0.4	Rueremonde	0.6	24	0.5
Ruermunde	3.7	39	0.8	Ruermonde	2.7	95	1.9
Rumunde	1.0	249	4.9	Rumonde	0.8	50	0.9
Ruremunde	22.6	233	4.6	Ruremonde	5.5	454	8.9
Rurmunde	2.2	27	0.5	Rurmonde	0.2	31	0.6
Romunde	10.8	1,291	25.3	Romonde	0.2	918	18.1
Total:	70.0	3,110	61.0	Total:	30.0	1,988	39.0

In addition to the table above, the following interesting facts can be mentioned:

- The name variants with a "u" in the second part of the name are much more common, both in the past and now, than the names with an "o".
- Before 1550, the family name is most commonly written as "Van Remunde" (22.1%), directly followed by "Van Ruremunde" (20.2%), "Van Roermond" (17.5%), "Romondt" (13.2%) and "Romund" (10.5%). After the year 1550 there are increasingly more ways of spelling. Some of those variants are no longer in use.
- Very occasionally the names "Van Reumonde", "Van Reumond", "Van Ruzemond", "Van Ruimondt" and "Van Ruzemunde" are also used. (Not shown in the table).
- It is often thought that the spelling in the High Middle Ages is "Van Roremunde" or "Van Ruregemunde" because the two oldest records are written that way. In reality, this spelling does not appear as a family name but as an area designation. The spellings "Ruremundanus", "Van Roremund" and "Van Roremunt" are also exemplary. There are too few observations from that period to make a reliable statement about the regular spelling in those days. In addition, it is likely that the writing is tied to a specific author or region.

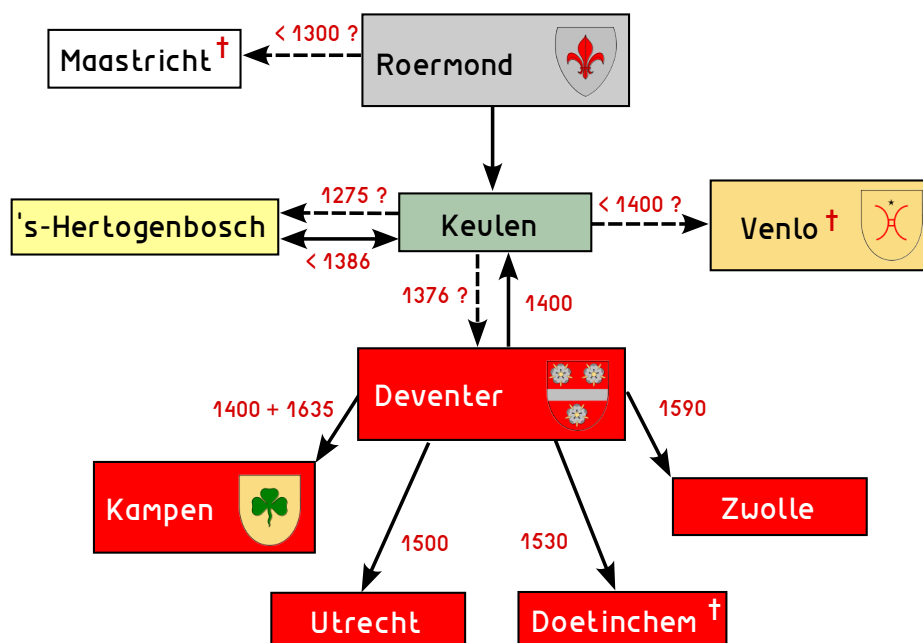

- In general (apart from the date of the deeds) the most common spelling is "Van Romunde" (12.1%), followed by "Van Ruremonde" (8.1%) and "Van Roermond" (5.8%).
- Still in use today are: "Van Roermund", "Van Ruremonde", "Van Rumund", "Van Remundt", "Van Remunt", "Van Romunde", "Romond", "Romondt", "Van Romondt" and "Van Romondt Vis".

The following names and name variants are not included in the analysis because it is unlikely that they are toponyms of the city of Roermond:

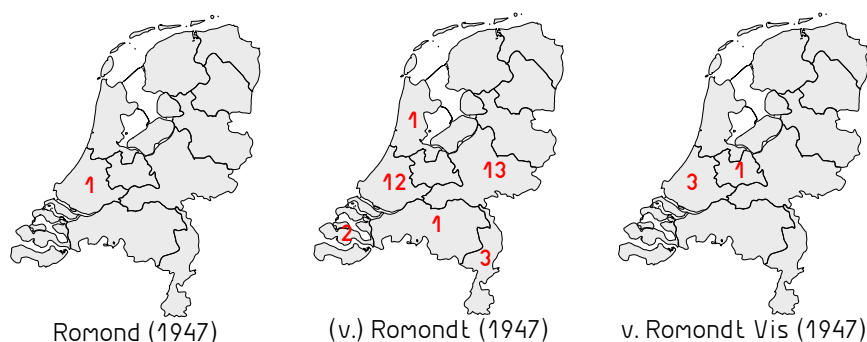

- The name bearers living today and their ancestors with the family name "Remund" in Switzerland and the United States (and some in Canada), for they are not related to the Dutch families.
- The name variations "Rührmund" and "Ruehrmund" in Germany and the United States.
- The possible Walloon name variations: Rulmonde, Rulmont and Reulmonde.

2.3 Geographical dispersion of name bearers

The picture below shows a graphical representation of the first dispersion of name carriers. It is a highly simplified representation, partly based on speculation (dotted lines). These are different families that own their family name to the original origin of their ancestors. There need not be any blood relationship between these families.

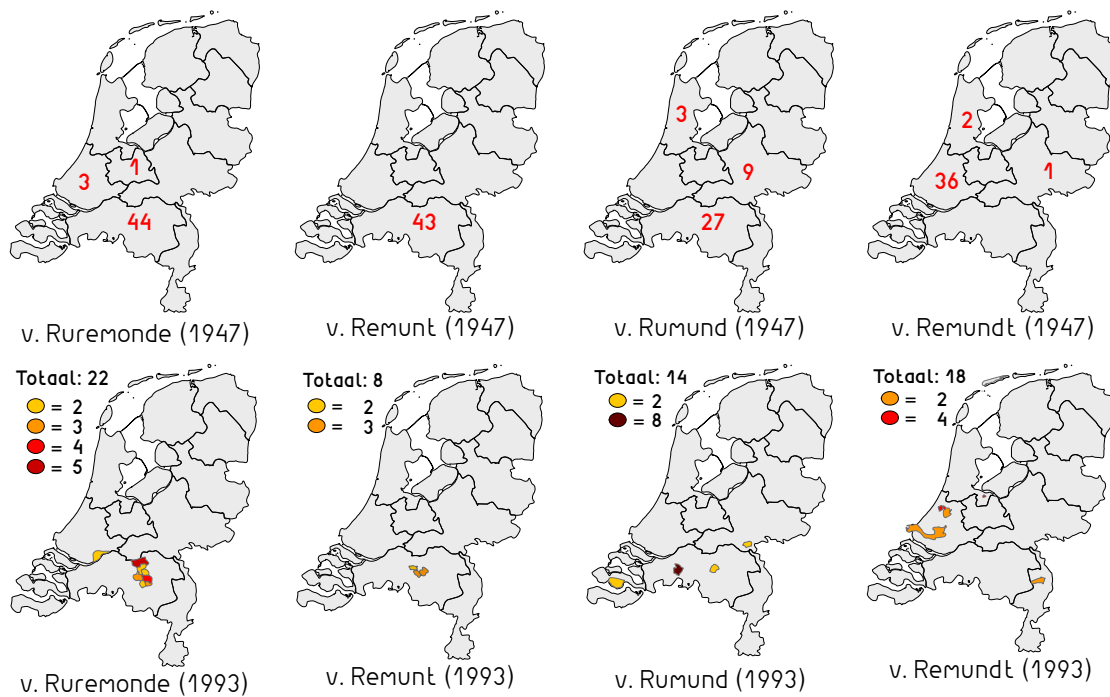

By using old distribution data, the areas of origin become more visible. Therefore geographic distribution maps have been made of the 10 family names still used today. These cards are shown below. Two time periods are distinguished. The distribution at provincial level derived from the 1947 Census and the distribution by municipalities, based on the telephone book from 1993. (The data from the telephone book is not available for the families (van) Romond (t) (Vis).

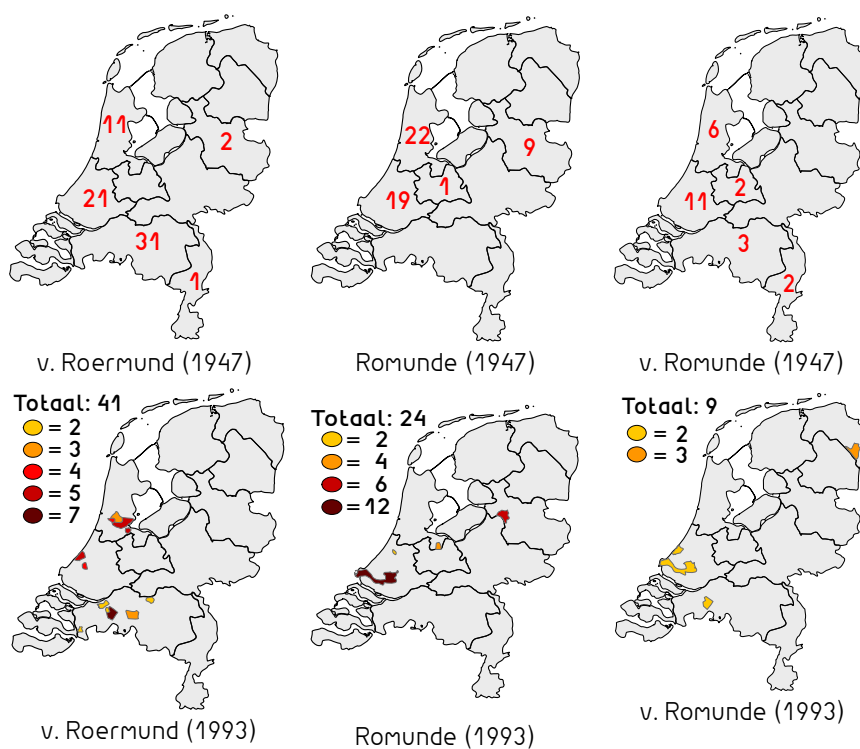

In 1993 the names Van Romond and Van Romont did not appear. The name Romunde appears four times in Cologne (e.o) in 2007 and once in Dortmund. (Van) Romond is more common in Germany. In Hochtaunuskreis (1), Mecklenburg-Strelitz (1), Alzey-Worms (1) and Tübingen (2). This name also occurs 4 times in Belgium and 2 times in Poland (in Siedlce). At the border with the Netherlands in Heinsberg, the name Romondt occurs once in that year.

The names Van Ruremonde, Van Remunt and Van Rumund were mainly concentrated in the province Noord-Brabant. The name Van Remundt was mainly found in the province Zuid-Holland.

The name Van Roerund is mainly found in the southwest of the Netherlands. The name (Van) Roermund also occurs once in Germany in 2007, in the city of Hochtaunuskreis.

2.4 Reading Guide and legend

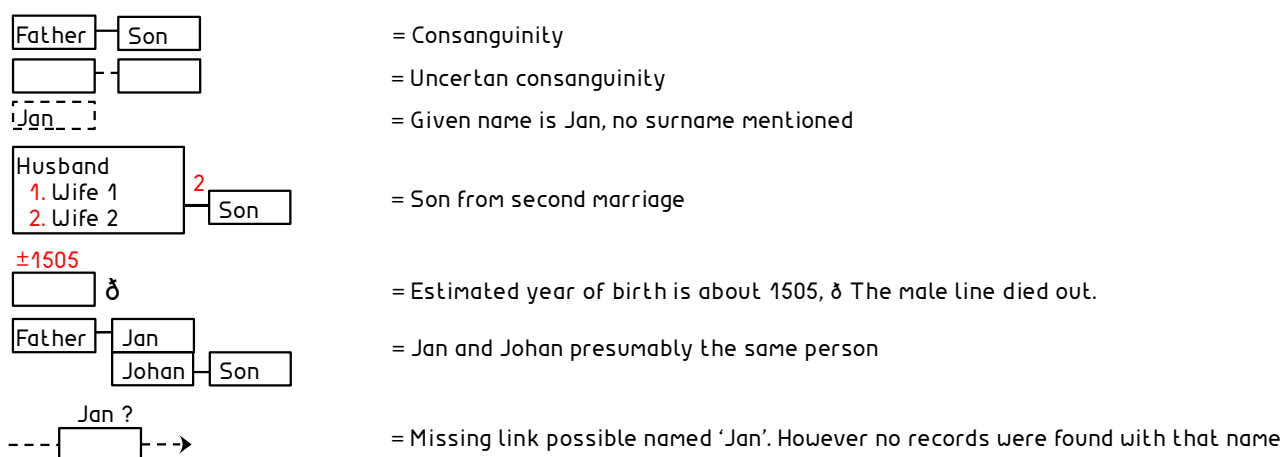

This report tries to provide an overview as complete as possible for all persons named after the city of Roermond. If possible, the mutual kinship between these persons is also mapped out by means of family trees. The older transcripts (up to around 1650) are cited as much as possible with acknowledgment of the source. The more recent entries are often easy to find in digital databases and are therefore not included.

Within the chapters, an attempt is made to present the related data as clearly as possible. As much as possible the following ranking is used:

- (Assumed) blood relationship
- Identical given names
- Chronological order (oldest records first)
- Cities and villages within geographic parts of the country (in historical perspective)

The family trees from before 1700 are usually shown graphically. After that, the family tree ramifies too much to get clear visual family trees. Sometimes hypothetical family trees are shown. The basis is often the fact that the oldest son was usually named after his paternal grandfather. Around the Middle Ages, people were adults at the age of 25, after which they still needed some time to provide for themselves before they could get married. It is assumed that the first child is begotten at an age of about 30 years.

The legend of the family trees is as follows:

In the 16th century the calendar was adjusted two times. Before 1575 in Brabant, the year began at Easter. After this year this changed. The first January that follows was called 1576 and the first of January was henceforth the start of the year. In 1582 the Gregorian calendar was introduced in the Netherlands. This meant that 14 December was immediately followed by 25 December. In this document the British date format is used (day/month/year).

To find your own family tree, it is best to work backwards. The easiest way to find your own name is to search for the surname of your grandmother for it will probably be unique. The version available on the internet does not contain living persons for privacy reasons. Since the text is digitally available, no index of names is included.

This document is translated by myself. I'm not English so the translation may grammatically be a bit of. The translation of old Dutch, old German and medieval Latin is extra challenging, also because the abbreviations, titles and old units are often no longer in use. Sometimes there is no English equivalent available. When a translation deviates too much from the original meaning, the original text is retained. In the chapters with full family trees, the usual word order may differ slightly from normal English. Adjusting this would take a disproportionate amount of time.

3 Genus of the guardians of Roermond

The first person to be mentioned in a document in which a persons name refers to Roermond as place of residence is the noblewoman Reinwids de Ruregemunde who was married to Adelbert 2 van Saffenberg (Count of Rode, Ministerial at Valkenburg, Lord at Ubach). In 1130, the provost of the monastery in Kloosterraden needed funds to finish the abbey church. Reinwidis went to this place and donated one and a half farm land in Houthem near Meerssen to the altar and accepted the habit. Then she let herself be walled in on the right side next to the choir. This made her one of the first female hermit in this region. But because it was believed at the time that a woman alone cannot live without other women, she felt it necessary for women to serve her. According to the brothers the many female visitors caused repeated commotion and annoyance. After her death on 12 March 1130 the choir lords therefore decided to prevent further nuisance by not allowing any more hermits [Annales Rodenses NL 1130]. Because Reinwidis died shortly after her arrival, it may be assumed that she was already of age. Presumably she was therefore born in the mid-11th century. Her name indicates that around that time there was already a place of residence with the name Ruregemunde.

The oldest written deed in which the name Roermond occurs as a name of origin is in the Cologne guild list. The name of Folmerus Roremunt can be found 27.5 cm. from the bottom and 8.5 cm from the right on the guild list. [GAR Res Gestae 3-1 No. 1. K. Hoeniger; Koelner Schreinsurkunden des 12. Jahrhunderts; Koeln, 1884-1895, in Quellen zur Rechts- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte der Stadt Koeln 2, 2, Bonn 1894, Publikationen der Gesellschaft fuer rheinische Geschichtskunde, p. 56]. Folmerus became a member of the merchant guild in 1130 and registered as a citizen of Cologne in 1140. He may have been an ancestor of the various merchants who traded between Cologne and 's-Hertogenbosch in the 14th and 15th centuries. The document in question is (somewhat) older than the one in which Reinwids is mentioned. Because she already was a person of age, she probable outdated Folmerus and therefore is the oldest person with the family name.

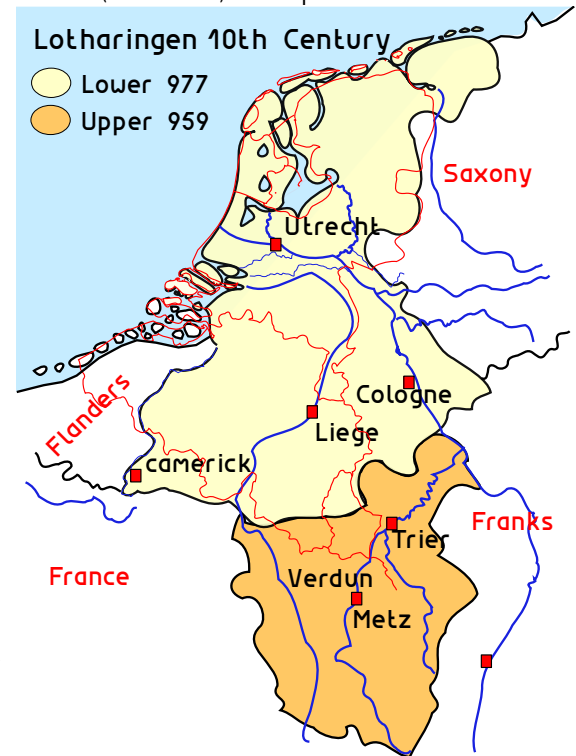

According to some (non-verifiable) sources Reinwid de Ruregemunde is said to be a great aunt of Folmerus Roremunt. The father of Regewindis (or Reinwindis) van Ruremunde was Heinrich Wassenberg, Count of Kessel and Kriekenbeck. Her mother was probably Van Kessel (Lady Van Kessel and Straelen) to Heinrich was married at the time. Her mother belonged to the family Van Cleves. Regewindis married about 1110 to Adelbert 2, Ministerial at Valkenburg, Heer at Ubach) Van Saffenberg (Count from Rode). Adelbert is a descendant of Charlemagne.

Regewindis or Reinwindis mother came from Kessel as a member of the Cleves family. The mother of Bishop Ansfried (founder of Thorn Abbey) was also a Cleves member. In a deed from 1127 in the book of Thorn Regiwindis van Ubach, Habets declares that she and her descendants owe various annual annuities and, upon death, a parcel to the Abbey of Thorn. Her husband managed and defended the property of the monastery Thorn in Adelbert. He is described in 1151 as Comitiss Predicta Readensis and Ministerial at Valkenberg (ca 1119). This also explains why he had a villa in Houthem-Valkenburg (deed of 20-09-1140). In the Annales Rodensis, Adelbert is mentioned as someone who was married to Reginwindis and had 2 sisters, Aleidis and Wendelburgis.

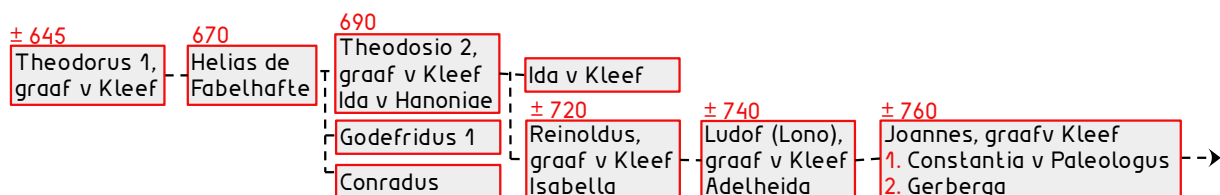

Folmerus (according to previously mentioned non-verifiable sources) could be a son of Reiner van Kriekenbeck and Millendonk who had custody of Roermond. Since this title was hereditary, Folmerus will have inherited it. This would make him the first guardian to use the name Roremunt (Roermond) as a family name. However, the oldest traceable record of a guardian is in 1189 and unfortunately no given name is mentioned.

3.1 Hypothetical ancestors of the guardians of Roermond (645-1140)

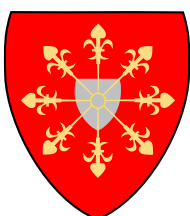

The ancestors of the guardians of Roermond possibly consisted of several Graves. Their counties were part of the independent kingdom of Lorraine (855-900). Independence could not always be maintained. Sometimes the kingdom belonged to the German Empire and sometimes to the West Frankish Empire. In 923 it was annexed with the German Empire and it became a royal fiefdom. In 959 Lorraine was divided into the vice duchies of Lower and Upper Lorraine under the transcendent duchy of Bruno Archbishop of Cologne. In 977 they became two full duchies. In 1106 Godfried 1, Count of Leuven, obtained the Landgraviate of Brabant. In 1183 Hendrik becomes the first Duke of Brabant. The county of Gelre was founded in 1046 around the town of Gelre, as the property of the family of the Flamenses of Wassenberg. It was not elevated to a duchy until 1339.

Family trees of the duke families have been sketched by various people, ending with the guardians of Roermond. These family trees often differ from each other. Because the primary sources are incomplete, the family trees of the Dutch counts should be considered as highly hypothetical. Unreliable relationships in family trees are in this document expressed with a dotted line. A continuous line is used for reliable kinships.

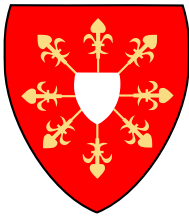

The (hypothetical) family tree of the ancestors of the guardians of Roermond begins with Theodosio, Count of Cleves, who is said to have been born around 645. The overview ends where the written name history of Roermond begins; with the aforementioned Folmerus Roremunt. Only the male line leading to Folmerus is shown. In the following graphical representation detailed data such as titles and associated possessions and functions are mostly omitted.

Cleves

Theodosio 1, Count of Cleves was born about 645. He died in 714 at the age of 69. His son was Helias de Fabelhafte, who was born in 670 and died in 741 at the age of 71. He inherited the county from his father and married Beatrix van Ceivia. They had three children. The eldest son Theodoric is born about 690 and inherits the parental county. When he marries Ida van Hanoniae, he also acquires the county of Teisterbant, which extends from Vlaardingen to Tiel. Their son Reinoldus was born around 720 and inherits the county of Cleves. He marries Isabella van Ardeniae Nunu Limurgiensis. They have a son around 740: Ludolf (Lono), Count of Cleves and Teisterband, who marries Adelheida of Aquitaine. They have a son named Joannes. He becomes Count of Cleves and Teisterband. In his first marriage he marries Constantia of Paleologus.

Graafschap
Teisterbant

They get one son: Robert 1 Count of Cleves and Teisterband. When Constantia dies, he marries Gerberga. From this marriage Balderic 1 van Teisterband (= Count of the Betuwe) originated. Balderic or Boudewijn was born about 780 and died in 846 at the age of 66. From his first marriage with Engertrude of Friuli he has four children. From his second marriage to Hildegarde of Provence-Geneva he had another daughter Hildegarde of Provence-Geneva.

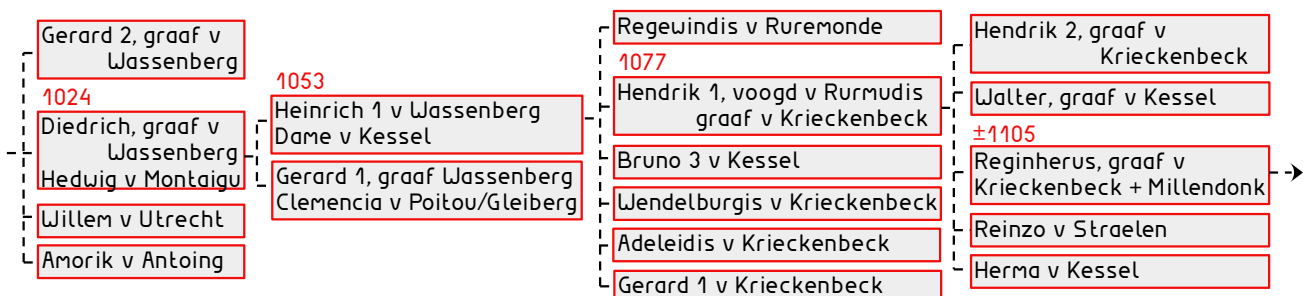

Nevelon
v. Betuwe

The counties of Cleves and Teisterbant remained united until 834. In that year Teisterbant was allotted to Robert 2, the youngest son of Count Balderic. His eldest son Ansfried was born in 812. From a marriage with Doda, two daughters and one son are born (847). This son Ricfrid (Dodo) obtains the county of Betuwe (= Teisterbant). He marries Hereswint, Countess of Cleves. They have four children. He died in 910 at the age of 65. Son Nevelon was born in 889 and died at the age of 54 in 943. He marries Guiburga van Henegouwe Ponthieu-Montreuil. They have four children, Balderic, Rudolf, Bertha and Irmfried (Immo).

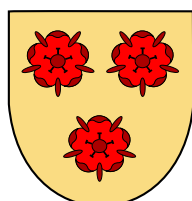

Rudolf
v. Betuwe

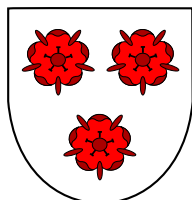

The placement of Balderik 2 the second husband of Bertha in the picture is somewhat difficult because he is also the son of her brother Rudolf. The latter is born about 920 and all his children are from his first wife Van Vliermaal (of Haspengouw) children. Son Arnold was born around 956. He became count of Haspengouw and married Ermentrud of Metz. From this marriage Diederik 1 count in the Betuwe was born around 977. He married Lutgard of Hamaland and died in 1020. They had two sons Gerard (the reddish one) was born about 995 and married Adelheid van Gelre, he became count of Betuwe and Wassenberg and died in 1070 at the age of 75.

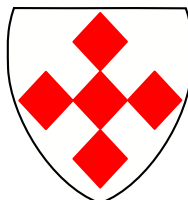

The second son Diedrich was born in 1024 and died in 19/10/1082 in Bouillon at the age of 58. He married Hedwig von Montaigne. This couple had two sons, of. Heinrich Wassenberg was born in 1053 and died in 05/10/1118 at the age of 61. His wife Van Kessel has six children from him. Regewindis is the first person to be called "Van Ruremunde". She was born around 1055 and died in 1130. Working to the guardians of Roermond, we follow the descendants of Henrik 1, Count of Kriekenbeck and Guardian of St Pantaleon and Rurmundis. He is born in 1077. Despite the fact that he only turns 37 years old, he still has five children. He died in 1114. His son Reginherus was born around 1105. He was Count of Kriekenbeck and Millendonck.

Graaf v. Kessel
+ Kriekenbeck

The Count of Kriekenbeck and Kessel originally carried the same family crest. The first coat of arms of a family member of Ubach was also a Lily, similar to that of Hendrik 1, lord of Kriekenbeck-Kessel and Roermond. Later this family crest will be used in a different color scheme by the guardians of Roermond.

According to the I. de Vries, Folmerus has born from this marriage around 1140. If so, Folmerus who joined the Cologne merchant guild in 1130 would have to be a different person than dan Folmerus van Kriekenbeck-Millendonk. De Vries claims, Folmerus would be the first guardian of Roermond, however no proof is presented to support his hypothesis. Records show that the oldest record of a guardian dates back to 1189 and in this deed no first name is mentioned. (The person person in question seals as a witness for Rutger van Mereheym in Merum just before he goes on a crusade). Presumably De Vries has taken over this part of the family tree from J.M. van Winter. In 1961, she made a first thorough attempt to describe Genus of the guardians (see above presented family tree). Whether the guardians of Roermond descended from Folmerus is however anything but certain. Even more, the researchers are ambiguous in their findings about the exact lineage of the guardians themselves. This is discussed in more detail in section 3.2.

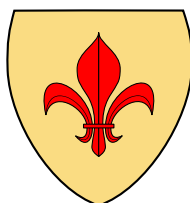

3.2 The guardians of Roermond (1203-1344)

As indicated, the guardians of Roermond lived in the 13th century. The members of this genus are the first to use the name Roermond or Ruremonde as a surname. According to the Siegburg miracle story, Roermond was still a Limburg possession in 1183 and became part of the duchy of Gelre between then and 1191. This duchy consisted of four parts. Roermond was in the last or fourth quarters of Gelre. This region was also referred to as Upper Gelre. Only until 1350 Roermond is regarded to be the capital of the upper quarter of Gelre.

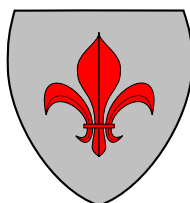

It is unclear how the title of Guardian came about. The guardians at that time were ministerials in the service of the Count of Gelre. Presumably their function initially consisted of protecting the count's toll on the (Oude) Maas. Likely the first members of the guardian family were knights who were raised to nobility through their office. So they were new nobility with a lower status than the old nobility. The guardians had the guardianship as a fief from the count (later duke) of Gelre. With the rise of the power from the city council, their function gradually declined in importance.

The guardians of Roermond carried a coat of arms that is recorded in the heraldic work Codex Gelre. Claes Heynen Heynensoen, the herald of the Duke of Guelders, made this work between 1369 and 1396. It is a hand drawn coat of arms book. Folio 89v shows the coat of arms of the Vocht van Rermunde and Folio 90 verso shows the Maesscap van Remunde as the 11th coat of arms. On the same page on the 9th position is also the coat of arms of the lord of Wachtendunc from which the coat of arms of the Van Ruremondes is said to be derived. According to some Theodoricus, Guardian of Roermond in 1283, would have belonged to the Wachtendonk family. However, no evidence has ever provided. As indicated earlier, the Kriekenbeck, Kessel and Ubach family carry a coat of arms with a silver lily on a red leaf.

The lily (= gleve, glæve or fleur de lys) is in fact a stylized iris, which is also called lys or lis in Dutch. However in French it means lily. The symbol originates from the Roman Empire and was in the 11th century adopted by King Philip of France. The lily also occurs on the old Dutch guilder and refers to the city of Florence (Florentia). The Dutch name "florijn" is derived from "florenus", the Latin name for lily.

However, according to C. Ruijs, the lily in the coat of arms of the Theodorics does not refer to France or Florence. The symbol is used by many generations in their coat of arms within a small geographic area. This concerns the area along the Niers down towards Roermond (near the highway B221 just across the Dutch border, with an arc to Roermond). The exact origin of the use of the lily in the coat of arms of the guardians of Roermond however remains unknown.

In 1343 the guardianship was transferred to Godart 2 de Vlodorp. The shield of the Van Ruremonde family is later continued in the Maesscap van Remunde. The reason for this is unclear. Maesscap or maegschap would mean something like consanguinity, the term has also been used in relation to the title of marshal [Herzogtum Geldern, Volume 1 item in 1236]. Relatives of the guardians' non-male lineage may have used the coat of arms.

In the 13th century, when Roermond already had city rights, deeds of all kinds had to be ratified by a city seal. This seal, a wax print of a seal stamp, was usually hung by a strip of parchment on a deed or parchment. Such a stamp always had an icon. In Roermond there was a coat of arms on the seal. This shield was several times slightly modified in the during the 14th to the 20th century. The lion in the coat of arms of Roermond is the lion of Guelders and the lily is probably derived from the coat of arms of the Theodorics (the guardians of Roermond).

There are various transcriptions of old texts available that deal with the guardians of Roermond. Based on this, J.M. van Winter was one of the first to attempt to describe the gender of the guardians. Later, C. Ruijs-Janssen and drs. G. van de Garde conducted new source research. Most of the information in this paragraph comes from them. With some additions, it all leads to the following picture:

The estimated years of birth suggest that Theodoricus 1 and 2 are the same person, who would have been born around 1170.

Generation 1 + 2

The first Guardian of Roermond is Theodoricus 1. He lived around 1203. Older sources indicate that his original surname is Van Wachtendonck. Evidence for this is inconclusive. Theodoricus de Rueremonde, as a knight, witnessed the conclusion of a treaty from Count Otto from Gelre with Duke Hendrik of Brabant in Leuven whereby the Count relinquished his rights to Megen (de Eeninge van de Kempen) and his allodium at Oosterbeek for the benefit of the duke formalized as a fief. The treaty also regulates some other matters and the count swears allegiance to the duke with 25 nobles of his country and 25 ministerials as "homo ligius" (tied to his house) [Sloet Oorkondenboek nr 401].

Roermond ± 1183-1187: Story about the son of the Duke of Limburg who locked up one named Theodoricus in his castle, called Rurimundum, and who was then miraculously freed through the intercession of St. Anno. [Handschr. Linssen 49]. <This doesn't seem to be the guardian>.

Roermond ? 1191: Register: Count Otto II of Guelders and his wife Richardis renounce a tax due to them from the farm at Putten belonging to Werden Abbey. Witnesses: Two brothers of Bremeth, two brothers of Hornen, Otto of Buren, William of Bornen, as well as the ministerials Ludolf of Stalen, Thideric of Hirtevelde, three brothers of Loen, Jacob of Arnhem, Gossuin of Berentrode, Vogt of Roermond (Ruremunde), Gerhard of Strale, and Thideric the Bastard. Colony, a. dom. [Landesarchiv NRW, Rheinland, Vorgang zu Verzeichnungseinheit AA 0545 / Werden, Rep. u. Hs. AA 0545, nr. 10].

The son of Theodoricus 1 was Theodoricus 2, who later also becomes Guardian of Roermond. In the period between 1224 and 1244 he is mentioned as a knight and ministerial. Sometimes "Van Ruremonde" is added. In 1234 he married with a certain Fridola. It probably concerns Fridola Godefridusdaughter from Asselt. Two seals are known from his term of office. From the following deed it appears that he had several children. One of them is son Godart.

Roermond, 16/06/1224: The abess and the convent of the Munster Abbey in Roermond on the one hand and the guardian Theodericus, patron of the parish church there, as well as Albert, pastor of the same church on the other hand, conclude an agreement regarding the rights and obligations of the abbey with regard to the parish of Roermond. [Harenberg (et al.), 1984, nr.1224.06.16, dl. 4, p190].

Sloet ??/07/1234: As a result of a reconciliation between Theodorich (2), attorney of the parish church in Roermond and the Cistercian monastery there, confirmed by Konrad, bishop of Porto, papal legate, he sells with his wife Fridola and his children to the monastery, a tin of 20 Cologne shillings for the smalle tiende van 42 areae, Otto, count of Gelre, is co-conqueror.

Neer, 1234-1235: Gerardus de Malberge donates the church of Keysebossch (for his salvation and for his recently deceased wife.) ½ Cologne mark and 6 denarii, which Theodericus de Ruremunde called "de Wesseim" and Rogerus de Millenberg owes him annually. [Klaversma; Altena and Horn Regesten p 48, 60 1 + Res Gestae 2 (regesten tot and with 1574 aangaande het graafschap / hertogdom Gelre e.o.) 241].

Generation 3

Son Gadart marries a certain Van Asselt. They have (presumably) five children, including two sons: Theodoricus (3) 'the Younger' and Godefridus. In 1242 and 1243 he is referred to as the son of the guardian Theodoricus. Godefridus is dan vernoemd naar de vader van zijn vrouw.

Generation 4

Son Godefridus became canon in Aachen in 1274, cantor in 1288 and dean in 1312. In 1314 he was appointed pastor in Roermond. No children of his are known. One thought (and no more than that) is that his mother was a child of Godfried heer van Asselt. In that case Godfriet van Roermond could have been named after his mother's father (and not after his father).

Roermond, 11/02/1269: ... Godefrido brother of the said guardian... declares that he no longer claims the right of patronage ... [Harenberg (et al.), 1984, nr.1269.02.11, dl. 2, p251-252].

Aachen, 06/10/1299: Dean Godefrid and the chapter of the Marienstift in Aachen buy an annuity of 21 solidi from priest Theoderich von Rurmund from his house in the Hardumsgasse (platea Harduini), from which the chapter receives 2 solidi ground rent worth 34 Aachen marks. Among the witnesses: Reinard von St. Adalbert, mayor (villicus) of Aachen, the aldermen Ritter Wilhelm Malebranke, Hermann von Holsit, Heribert Godsname, Wilhelm Sturm, Johann Genannt Kalf, Arnold von Wilde. [LAV NRW Rheinland, AA 0103 / Aken, St. Marien, Urkunden AA 0103, nr. 138].

To the parish church of St. Christopher, located in Roermond, your archdeaconry is vacant to this day by the voluntary resignation or death of Lord Godefridi. <On 15/03/1314 with the addition "formerly dean of Aquens">. AA 0104, nr. 4].

Aachen, 17/07/1314: Chaplain of Aachen Cathedral, is mentioned in a private transaction. According to the cathedral's death book, it is commemorated on 31 August (his death date), 30 September and 1 November, because twice a mark has been given to the chaplains of the cathedral. It is unclear whether it concerns the same man in 1289 and 1314.

In the death book of the monastery Burtscheid near Aachen on states that on 17 June, Diederik van Roermond died. His wife is still alive at the time of registration. The couple has donated an annual interest of 12 pence and 20 pence to the monastery. In the death book, the year of death is not mentioned. The oldest registrations date from 1302; the registration of Diederik van Roermond follows after a long series of registrations in different hands and must therefore date from many years later [www.historieroermond.nl/voogden/diedrik/diedrik.htm].

Theodoricus 3 (Diederik), married Utilinde in his first marriage. This is evident from a deed from 1268. He had 2 daughters with her: Sophia and Katharina. He most likely remarried (after 1268) with Margaretha, from whom two daughters emerged; Elisabeth and Agnes. There are also at least two sons. The eldest is Gerlacus and the name of the second is unknown.

He fought with the Gelderland nobles in the battle of Woeringen in 1288, but was captured. In the Rymkronyk of Jan van Heelu concerning this feat of arms it is said: "Her Geraert van Kelre, ende van Rumonde die voget: dese blijven alle gevaen." (The Lord Gerard of Kelre and the Roermond Guardian were captured). Theodoricus developed into a man of some standing. He was sent on diplomatic missions abroad as a confidant of Count Reinald 1 of Gelre. Theodoricus 3 is mentioned in the writings until 1303. In 1324 Margaretha v Ruremonde, the widow of Theodoricus 3, is called guardian of Roermond. This suggests that she took over the guardianship (temporarily). After her death, Gerlacus and then (the husband of) his daughter Elisabeth probably took over the guardianship temporarily. In 1343, the guardianship came into the hands of the Van Vlodrops.

Roermond, 23/11/1259: Pope Alexander IV instructs the deans of the churches of St. Florinus and St. Castor in Koblenz to investigate an agreement between the abbess and convent of the Munster Abbey in Roermond on the one hand and the pastor and Theodoricus, knight, patron of the parish church there on the other, and if that agreement would be very disadvantageous to the Munster Abbey, to impose the canonical regulation on the matter. [Harenberg (et al.), 1984, nr.1283.07.27, dl. 2, p215-216].

Roermond, 04/09/1268: Otto, Count of Gelder, declares that he has transferred the right of patronage of the parish church there to the Cistercian monastery in Roermond, of which Theodoricus de Ruraemunda, named guardian, had relinquished to him, Otto, as feudal lord for the benefit of the monastery, with the permission of his wife Udelinde and his brother Godefridus. Generatie 5

Gerlach does not adopt the name Van Ruremunde, but calls himself Heket (Gerlich Hecket, Gerlacus Hechet). This is also the surname of the man Margaretha married after Theodericus died. Gerlach may have adopted another surname because the name R(ur)emunde was too strongly linked to guardianship. But the question also arises whether he was the son of Margaretha with her second husband. But Gerlach sells some possessions in Gützenrath near Brempt to the chapter of Xanten in 1304. He calls himself knight Gerlacus named Heket, first-born son of guardian Theodorici advocati de Remunde [Binterim, A.J. & J. H. Mooren (1828)].

Gerlach Heket also seals with a lily, but a bar stem with 4 triangular pendants has been added. This addition makes the coat of arms distinct from that of his father [G van de Garde & C. Ruijs-Janssen (2008)]. Because he explicitly states that he is the first-born son, this suggests that there is at least one other son of Theodericus.

It is not known whether Gerlach had any descendants. In the Landesarchiv of Nordrhein Westfalen the name Heket, Hecket and Hechet still appear. The oldest mention is in 1324 of Wen(n)emar. On 22-02-1356 the widow of squire Wenemar Heket sells various properties from the estate. He also had a son who becomes canon of the cathedral in Munster. Frequently mentioned in the archives. Both father and son seal a transaction on 26-01-1430 with an almost identical seal. The last deed is from 1437. Other persons with this surname: Herman (1381), Johan (1428-

1440), Herman (1481), Evert (1497-1501), Godfried (1523-1524), Lambert (1568), Heinrich (1605-1631), Johan (1568-1619), Heinrich (1707)

Berk

In 1003, a village Berka (Rheinberk) was built, possibly as a royal court. The original rights were probably granted around 1006 by the Archbishop of Cologne. In 1233, the village Berka received permission from Heinrich von M'llenark to build a fortress. The first fortification initially consisted of foundation walls and wooden fortifications, which in fact created a town. The inhabitants were given civil rights and freedoms. The citizens were also exempt from Vogtdienst. These town rights were confirmed in 1248 by Archbishop Konrad von Hochstaden. At the end of the 13th century, the enclosure was replaced by a permanent ring wall with crenels and towers (including the customs tower), moats were constructed and a castle was built.

In 1322, Archbishop Henry 2 of Virneburg established a court with council. This consisted of 12 members each who were elected for life. The mayor and steward were elected annually by the citizens. In 1409 permission was granted to hold a weekly market.

Rheinberg is first mentioned in 1003. Initially, Rheinberg was an exclave of the Electorate of Cologne. In 1233, it received city rights from Prince-Bishop Henry of Cologne. In 1337, the Amplonius grammar school was founded, which still exists today. Rheinberg was already an important customs place before 1235. The toll was collected by the Archbishops of Cologne. A customs tower was built for security. The Rhine toll was withdrawn in 1293. In 1314, various tax rights were combined by King Frederick 3. The first namesake in 1383 was alderman Dietrich van Ruremunde.

In 1123, Archbishop Frederik 1 Cologne decided to build a monastery. His brother Arnulf commissioned the French Cistercian monastery of Morimond to do so, after which 12 monks left for the Lower Rhine. The first settlement was probably built nearby near the later monastery on the Kamper Berg. The monk Gerard of Ruremunde is mentioned as the first namesake in 1295.

Theoderich v Ruremunde Nesa

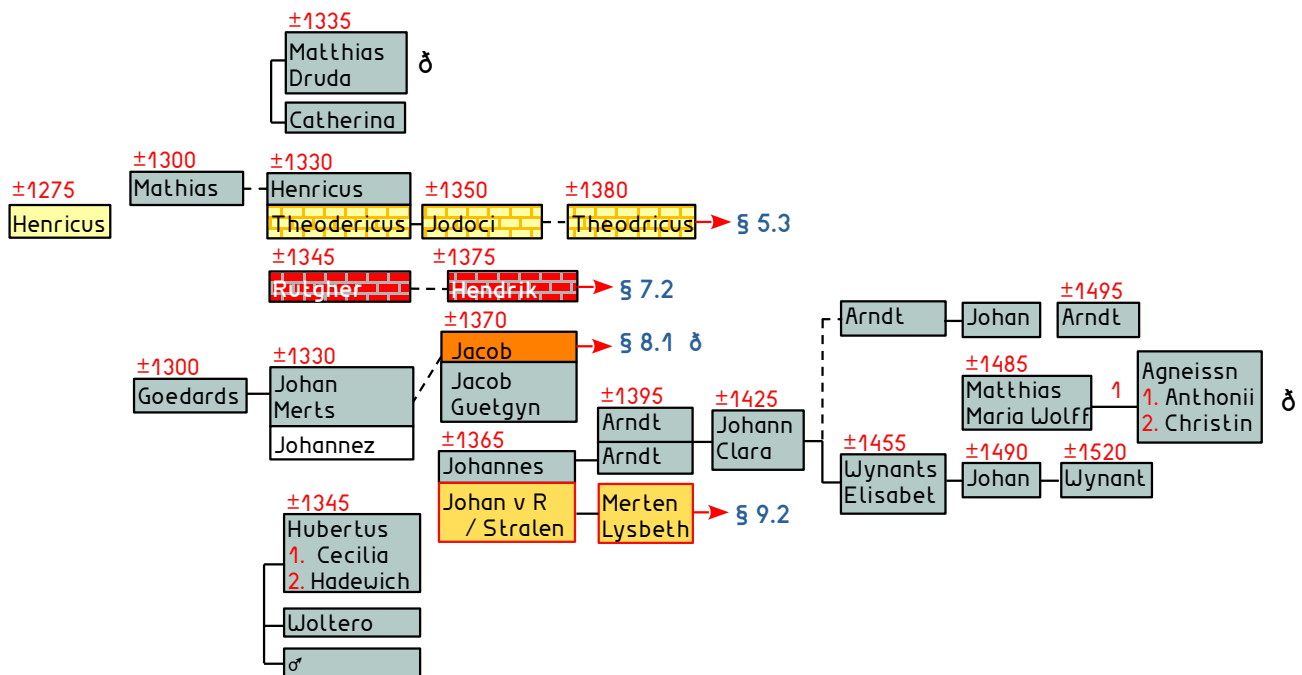

4.2 Cologne

Cologne is located at the crossroads of major trade routes and the Rhine, which made it one of the largest cities north of the Alps around the Middle Ages. The Bishop of Cologne was an important figure on the political scene of this time period and for a long time dominated the southern border area of today's Netherlands. In 1282, Cologne joined the Hanseatic cities. In the Battle of Woeringen in 1288, the contingent of Cologne's citizens fought on the side of the Duke of Brabant, the bishop's enemy. The defeat of the bishop allowed the city to free itself from his rule and become an independent city-state in the midst of principalities, which remained under the bishop's authority. Theodoricus 3, guardian of Roermond, fought on the side of the Gelder nobles but was taken prisoner. Around 1367 Cologne was, with 40,000 inhabitants, the largest city in the Empire.

In 1475, Emperor Frederick 3 officially confirmed the status of Cologne as a free imperial city and it would remain so for more than three centuries. During the Reformation (after 1517) under Martin Luther's leadership, the city and the surrounding diocese remained Catholic. After the Holy Roman Empire and several other states in Europe in 1648 signed the Treaty of Westphalia, the Thirty Years' War came to an end. This had major consequences for the balance of power. The Emperor's power was severely curtailed. The House of Habsburg, which always delivered the Emperor, lost most of its control over the German monarchs. In addition, they were obliged to have religious tolerance towards the Calvinists and, among other things, they had to recognize the independence of the Republic of the Seven United Netherlands.

4.2.1 Merchants from Cologne

The following text mentions the Cologne merchants. The first mentions of Folmerus are the oldest mentions of the family name. It is possible that he was not only a merchant but also the first guardian of Roermond (see § 3.2). It is not certain that Jacobus the Jew and Mathias (who died in 1370) were merchants, but that seems plausible. It is possible that they did not yet use the name Rur(e)munde as a family name, but that it is an indication of where they came from (namely Roermond). The merchants are shown graphically in the following figure. The first merchants from the other chapters have also been added for the sake of clarity, even though there may not be any blood relationship.

Folmerus

In 1130 Folmerus Roremunt became a member of the merchant guild in Cologne and in 1140 he was registered as a citizen of this city.

Jacobus de Jood

The trade in Cologne also attracts the Jews. The first Jews probably traveled with the Romans as merchants and traders to the Gaul and the Rhine area centuries earlier. It is remarkable that from 1275 the Jew Iacobus de Ruremunde is mentioned. This Jacob ben Alexander (alias Jacobus, son of Alexander) owns a house in the Jewish quarter of Cologne. A few years later he sells that house to Nathan and Episcopus (Lifman and Gottschalk) from Roermond. And nearby Dalberg rabbi Nathan van Ruremonde is mentioned. [J. Michman et al. Pinkas; History of the Jewish community in the Netherlands; Kluwer, 1992, p. 494-496].

Cologne, ??/06/1282: It is also made known that the above-mentioned Iacobus de Ruremunde has delivered and transferred half of the prescribed house and area, front and back, below and above, wherever he has access through the partition wall, to Mannis, the son of Jacob de Goch, on the condition that Mannis himself may use the above-mentioned half of the house during his life wherever he wishes. But at his death it will revert to Kalemannus, the son of Mannis himself (born in the Sarah, son of his first wife). [HAKst, Best 107 Schreimbücher. A107/1 p. 9R].

Cologne, 06/05/1290: The city or Roermond is obliged to urge the citizen Job. von Ruremunde from Cologne to the restitution of the legally obtained money, silver items and jewels to their citizen Aleit Reynoltz. [Mitteilungen aus dem Stadtarchiv von Köln, Or. Pap. Sekrets].

Mathias de Remunde + Henricus de Rurmunde

Cologne, ± 1370: a certain Mathias de Remunde died in Cologne. He may have been born around the turn of the century. Henricus de Rurmunde is mentioned as a civil-law notary. [Memorienbuch des Stifts Mariengraden, Best. 251]. <This may be the same person as Heinrich von Roermond(e) who is mentioned on 18/09/1360 as canon of the Maria Kapitol in Cologne>.

Goedard + son merchant Johan x Merts / Neesgin

In 1386, the merchant Jan van Ruermunde in Neuss (on the Rhine) had an accident resulting in an open bone fracture. He prays to Saint Mary for healing and within a day he is healed. The miracle was recorded in the "Miracle book from Onse Lieve Vrouwe to 's-Hertogenbosch" (see § 5.2). Apparently he traded between Cologne and 's-Hertogenbosch. In 1396 the couple Johannus and Merts are mentioned and in 06/02/1399 the same Johannes is possibly mentioned in the archives of the city of Cologne as the son of the late Goedards von Roermond. Goedards was born about 1315.

Merchant Matthias x Druda

Matthias (Mathis) van Roermond (alias Van Ruremond (e), Van Ruremund (e) and his wife Dura (alias Druda, Druyde, Drudgen, Druytghin) also lived in the city of Cologne (Köln) in 1386. He will have been born somewhere between 1320 and 1335. The couple was very wealthy. Matthias traded in wine as well as spices and herbs. In 1390 he was in fifth place with 102 marks in excise duty [Res Gestae 3 (regesten tot and with 1574 aangaande het graafschap / hertogdom Gelre e.o.) 124]. A possibly alias of his wife is Gertruda, because a certain Matthias von Remunde and his wife Gertrud founded the small monastery Remunde or Dcutz on the Hunnernerücken in Cologne. The monastery is first mentioned in 1398. ["Esch und seine Höfe von 989 bis ins 19. Jahrhundert von Clemens von Loos-Corswarem"]. The person mentioned is probably the same as the merchant in spices and herbs. The Wernershof is, next to Fronhof, the largest court still in use today. (Early there it was successively called Vosshof; Printzhof; Wittengensgut and Dr. Hozheimi-Gut). [See M. Gelhar, 1988].

Before his death, Matthias was admitted to the Geisthaus hospital in Cologne. On 02/03/1407, Johan van Aiche and his wife Blytze Schaluyns act as administrators of his assets until Rome responds to several proposals and/or petitions from Matthias. Among other things, that the mayor of Cologne and the provisionalists of the Heilige Geesthuis have the right of protection at the altar of St. Michael in St. Laurenz. That request is not granted until 09/01/1411 [HASTK, U 2/492]. Matthias has already died by then and his wife has moved into the monastery Sancti Marcelli in Cologne. The couple has set up a special foundation that manages a fund they set up. With this, among other things, it is arranged that 600 guilders are paid to hold a daily holy mass in the St. Laurence Church. Among other things, the mayor of Cologne and the provincials of the Holy Spirit House have the right of protection of the altar of St. Michael in St. Laurenzkirche. The couple is also buried there, but the church was demolished in 1818. The foundation is still mentioned in archives in the seventeenth century. The Couple also had properties at Niel <Waldniel ?> near Roermond. They probably remained childless for only his sister is mentioned in their will. The will appears twice in the archives. [Best. 160 (Armenverwaltung (AV)), U 3/462 + Best. 110R (Testamente Buchstabe R), U 3/514] The regest from the collection of the Armenverwaltung is the most extensive because it contains an additional provision.

At the Hanenkonvent he even had the city coat of arms hung above the entrance door. He asks for the supervision of that what was taken away from him 8-9 years ago. In addition, Johann illegally took over the house Remunde (17) 8 years ago, which was owned by a citizen Mathias v. Remunde and his wife Druda. He would like to be buried in the church of the Friars Minor, to whom he also left 6 Rhenish guilders; each of the other mendicant orders, namely the ministers, Augustinians, Carmelites and Friars Crucified, 6 Rhenish guilders.

He then gives his mother 300 Rhenish guilders; his maid Jutte, as the inheritance that his deceased wife Cecilia had left her in her will, 20 Rhenish guilders; his brother Woltero a silver jug weighing 1 silver mark. To his brothers he gives all his armor and all his clothing that belongs to his body, to share among themselves.

The testator also reports that he once had quarrels and disputes with the Cologne citizen Carole de Aquisgrani about certain sums of money. He completely releases these monies and the claims arising from them and completely renounces them.

Hadewigis wishes that 500 Rhenish guilders be distributed among the poor of Christ, as well as among their friends and relatives, as she will order during her lifetime. Out of mutual burning love, the spouses appoint each other as universal heirs and administrators of their will. They want their debts to be paid first, their unlawfully obtained goods to be returned, and their exequias to be kept in good order. Anyone who goes against the will may receive nothing. The spouses revoke all previously written wills; common right of revocation. It happened in her house called Zome Huntghin, located above the Marspoort in the parish of St. Alban. When he entered the Abbey of St. Marin in Cologne, he would have been a youngster of good background, with a gentle character, diligent and suitable for any job. On 11/13/1535, at the age of 60, he died sitting quietly and peacefully in his chair. [J.H. Kessel, Antiquitates Monasterii S. Martini Maioris Coloniensis, Köln 1862 blz 192].

4.2.3 Cologne administrators, notaries, jurors and citizens

Ru(o)mund

The city archives of Cologne mention that on 15 February 1106, Archbishop Frederick of Cologne admitted the patron church of Berke (Rheinberg). A certain Ru(o)mund is mentioned as one of many witnesses [HASTK, Best. 239 (Kunibert), UK / 4]. His name is included in a list of given names, so Ru(o)mund probably also a given name instead of a family name and does not refer to the city of Roermond. It is however remarkable that the same deed also mentions a Folmer(us). No title of him is mentioned. It is unlikely that this would be Folmerus Roremunt (see below) because he's a witness. This suggests he's mature. So this Folmer was born no later than 1080 and the year of birth of Folmerus Roremunt is estimated at 1105.

4.2.4 Registrations of name bearers at the University of Cologne

Many name bearers already enjoyed university education in the Middle Ages. The nearest universities were located in France, England and Germany. Paris (\pm 1150) and Toulouse (1229) are the oldest universities in France. Oxford (1167) and Cambridge (1209) the oldest in England. The University of Erfurt was founded in 1379, Heidelberg in 1385, Cologne in 1388 and Leipzig in 1409. Leuven (Louvain) follows in 1425. In today's Netherlands, the first university is not opened until 1575 in Leiden. The universities kept records of matricles. These are lists of registrations. These were far from complete. For the University of Leuven, for example, it is estimated that about 25% of the students did not register. The medieval matricles from Oxford and Cambridge have unfortunately been lost.

In Heidelberg there are 3 records of registrations of name bearers. In one case it probably it concerns a family name. At that time, many people from the current Netherlands were studying in Leuven. However, no record has been found of a name bearer registering there. From 1427 to 1558, 55 name bearers enrolled at the university in Cologne. It should be noted that sometimes the same person is registered more than once. Only relevant name bearers are listed in the following table. So all names who presumably refer to Roermond as a place of residence instead of a family name have been omitted.

Who is who?

- 01 Hermannus de Ruremunde may have been pastor of St. Andrew in 11/07/1393. Another slightly less likely option is Herman who was born near Deventer around 1410 and later married Styne (see § 7.2). and Hermannus Pijnghe or Pingge from 's-Hertogenbosch (see § 5.3). In this context, the following entry is interesting because both Styne van Remunde and a certain Tilmann Pyne (a possible alias for Pijnghe/Pynghe) are mentioned:

Cologne, 20/04/1422: Tilmann Pyne, canon at St. Kunibert, receives a farm under kraaienbomen in hereditary loan from the Ordenchoven Monastery (sisters Grete van Oydinghoven, Lyse van Deynsberch, Styne van Remunde, Coene van Rummerskirchen, Jutte van sinte Walburberghen, Hanne van Engelant). Canon Tilmanus Tym takes hereditary lease from the Oedinkhoven Monastery at Sint Kunibert. . [Archive der Stadt Köln, U 1/1557A].

- 02 Probably the father or grandfather of 05. Possibly Johan van Ruremunde who was born before 1385, who later became governor in Venlo and possibly there became the ancestor of all other name bearers is in that city (see §).
- 03 Theodorus could be the son of Joost van Rurmunde and Geertrui from 's-Hertogenbosch, but this is not likely (see § 5.2). The same goes for number 06.
- 07 Possibly Brother Wilhelmi Ruremund from Cologne who was born around 1420.
- 10 Geert could be the son of Joost van Rurmunde and Geertrui from 's-Hertogenbosch, but this is not likely (see § 5.2). Another candidate is Hendrick van Remunt from the Utrecht area (?) Who was married to Elisabeth Gerritsdr. (see § 7.3.1).
- 11 Possibly Anton van Ruremundt canon at Cologne in 1466.

Godefridie de Rurmundia

Engelbertus de Ruremundia

- 15 This probably concerns Matthias who was born around 1445, lived in Venlo and married Catharina Puteanus. (see § 9.2). The same goes for number 29.
- 17 Probably Herman who was born around 1410 in Deventer and married Styne. (see § 7.2) Ditto nr. 35?
- 18 The same person as 20? Probably Wynand van Remunde a merchant in Cologne who was born around 1435 as the son of Johan.

Mathie de Rurmunda

Goswinus de Ruremunda

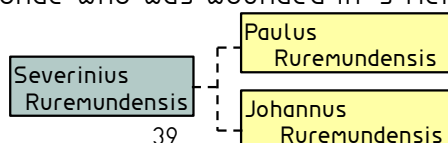

- 28

Benedictie de Ruremunda

Johannus de Ruremunda

- 42 Presumably Thielman van Remonde who was wounded in 's-Hertogenbosch in 1490 (see § 5.2).

46 Also see numbers 43 and 55.

47 Also see number 56.

48 Probably Johan Dletterser van Rueremunde who was married to Jofv. Johanna and in 1563 guardian van Heylken van Rueremunde.

5.1 Historical context in 's-Hertogenbosch

More than 40,000 years ago, the location of what is now 's-Hertogenbosch was already a place of residence for Neanderthals. Modern man started a trading settlement at the end of the 12th century and permanent residence followed soon after. Because of its strategic location, fortress walls were soon built. In 1188 Godfrey 3 of Leuven (the father of the first duke of Brabant) granted the settlement city rights.

The population grew rapidly so as early as the first half of the 13th century, people already lived outside the city walls. The first name bearers in the city were merchants. They played an important role, because trade between cities is essential for the city's survival. The cities within the old Duchy of Brabant were strongly interconnected. Outside the Duchy, the city also maintained a lot of contact with Dordrecht.

In the middle of the 14th century, the duchies were even more mutually dependent because from 1348 to 1350 there was a major plague epidemic, making the city extra vulnerable. In 1355 thirty-six Brabant cities and freedoms therefore concluded an alliance about mutual assistance in the defense. However, this did not prevent Count Lodewijk van Male from Flanders from conquering Brussels, Leuven and Antwerp a year later. Thirty years later, Gelre posed a threat to the Duchy. In 1386 the Duchess Joanna of Brabant, Philip the Bold Duke of Burgundy, Albrecht of Bavaria count of Holland and William duke of Jülich and Guelders concluded a peace treaty in 's-Hertogenbosch. But when everyone had left, Willem resumed his raids through the Meierij. The bishops of Cologne, Bremen and Utrecht supported him in his efforts.

Even in the 15th century things remained restless. The first city fire raged in 1419. In 1436 there was a war between Holland and the Baltic countries, causing the grain supply to stagnate. In addition, there were floods in the Betuwe, Holland and Friesland. All this led to a major famine in 's-Hertogenbosch. The plague epidemic of 1439 to 1442 decimated the population. In 1463 another big city fire raged in the city. 4,000 houses went up in flames. Thatched or straw roofs were banned and had to be replaced with slates or tiles within ten years. Jannen Gieliss van Remundt and a few other name bearers who were sliders will have had no shortage of work.

The 16th century is known as the Golden Age of Brabant. Nevertheless, the beginning of this century marked an economic decline of the city. The attacks from Gelre by Maarten van Rossum, Charles V's general, were the main cause of this. Traders feared their merchandise and avoided the city. This caused trade to decline. In 1515 Charles V held his "Happy entry" in 's-Hertogenbosch as Duke of Brabant. He was accompanied by his teacher Adriaan Florisse van Utrecht, who later became Pope Adrian VI. In 1525 the first forms of Lutheran reformism began to appear. However, the church and government only allowed Catholicism. The ensuing religious struggle later became one of the causes of the Eighty Years' War. 1531 was a disaster year for 's-Hertogenbosch. The plague broke out and the price of the corn was high. Due to the great poverty, the streets became "particularly unsafe at night. All foreign nationals who had stayed in the city for less than a year were ordered to leave 's-Hertogenbosch. The situation worsened by flooding. Nine years later the harvest failed due to persistent drought. Many people died. Because Willem van Gulik transferred his duchy of Guelders to Charles V in 1553, Charles became lord of the Netherlands and political peace was created. Two unions were concluded in The Netherlands: in the south of Atrecht (6 January) and in the north of Utrecht (23 January). The south chose to maintain a Catholic religion and remained loyal to Spain. The north chose for independence from Spain. Later that year, the city council of 's-Hertogenbosch gave in to the Calvinist pressure and announced the Union of Utrecht from the facade of the town hall. A day later the news came that Parma had conquered Maastricht and was on its way to 's-Hertogenbosch. The Calvinists at 's-Hertogenbosch then fled the city. That summer, efforts were made to bring about peace between the rebellious regions and to unite the two Unions. These Cologne negotiations came to nothing. Only 's-Hertogenbosch declared itself prepared to return under the authority of the king. The Peace of Cologne was proclaimed on December 20. The Calvinists had disappeared from the city and the Catholic Reformation brought Catholicism back to flourish within the city walls. Some 15 years later (1585) State troops approached the city, but eventually they had to withdraw. They settled on the Crèvecoeur fortress so that they continued to pose a threat to the city.

At the end of the 16th and the beginning of the 17th century, many people left the city and built a new future for themselves elsewhere. The population fell to 11,300, less than half of the population a century earlier. In 1629 the Dutch troops conquered the city. From that moment on, 's-Hertogenbosch was governed from The Hague by the States General. The aldermen were no longer appointed from the Bossche population, but came here from the northern Netherlands. Catholicism was banned throughout the Meierij. Nevertheless, 80% of the population of Bossche remained Catholic. The capitulation was confirmed in 1648 in the form of the Peace of Munster. The Duchy of Brabant was split into a State and a Spanish part. A large part of the boundary that arose at that time forms the current border between the Netherlands and Belgium. In 1672 war broke out with France.

The aldermen's Bank in 's-Hertogenbosch has existed since 1184. The Aldermen's Protocol are registers of voluntary jurisdiction and are part of the old judicial archive. The first deeds date from 1367 and are now known under the name De Bossche protocols. Until 1550, the deeds were often drawn up in Latin, using self-invented abbreviations. Since 2018, the Dutch transcripts of the deeds from after 1500 have been digitized and available online. However, they only contain the most relevant information from the deeds. After 1565, the Council of Trent prescribed that the churches must keep a baptismal register. As a result, St. Jan cathedral has the oldest baptismal book in the Netherlands. The names mentioned in the certificates do not always contain a family name. This makes it difficult to determine blood relationships.

Many name bearers lived in the historic Duchy of Brabant. The genera Van Rumund, Van Remunt, Van Ruremonde and Van Roermund originated from this region. The family tree data can mainly be found on bhic.nl, erfgoedshertogenbosch.nl en bossche-encyclopedie.nl.

5.2 Progenitor Henricus (± 1275)

The oldest record of a name bearer in the city of 's-Hertogenbosch concerns Henricus van Rumunde who lives on 't Zand. His 'surname' may not refer to his gender, but to his place of birth. He was a contemporary of the guardians of Roermond who lived between 1200 and 1340. In 1342 Henricus sold his leasehold on a piece of land that the city of 's-Hertogenbosch had issued with the permission of the Duke Jan 3 of Brabant. The city apparently needed money, possibly to build new city walls. Or because of the construction of the St. Jan cathedral. Citizens and institutions located in the city (such as the Table of the Holy Spirit) enjoyed a pre-emptive right when it was released.

's-Hertogenbosch, 08/05/1342: Land for sale freedom 's-Hertogenbosch - De Vliert. Henricus de Rumunde living on 't Zand ("super arena") transfers land in the Duizend Morgen, Township 's-Hertogenbosch, "in den Vliedert", after sale 1 morgen to Nycholaus gend. Van den Arennest, on condition that it is the city is paid an inheritance tax of 6 shillings and that the buyer may only alienate this parcel to the citizens of the city of 's-Hertogenbosch. [Bossche encyclopedie, Tafel vd heilige Geest 1271-1359, nr 253a]. <This is the oldest record of a name bearer in 's-Hertogenbosch>.

In a register of the Groot Ziekengasthuis (in 's-Hertogenbosch) [no. 853] from 23/04/1439 a certain Henricus, son of the late Henricus Wouterszoon, is mentioned as the owner of a yard on the Zand. Unfortunately without stating the family name, so it cannot be determined whether it is the same person as Henricus van Rumunde. 10 years later, Truda van Roermond is also mentioned. She could be the sister or daughter of Henricus. In 1399 Margareta is mentioned as daughter of the late Henricus. She was a former owner of a house in Hintham.

's-Hertogenbosch, 02/01/1352: ... bequest number 23: a large sheet and a duvet to Truda van Roermond ("tapetum") [Bossche encyclopedie, Tafel vd heilige Geest van 's-Hertogenbosch 1271-1359, nr 345].

's-Hertogenbosch, 18/11/1399: Petrus Otten soen Sold to Ambrosius gnd Broes a house and yard in Hintham, near Den Bosch, between Henricus van Enghelant on the one hand and Hilla gnd on the other hand, which house and property Henricus van den Borne had acquired from Margareta dvw Henricus van Ruermonde, and which house and property had come to the aforementioned Petrus after the death of the aforementioned Henricus. [Bossche Protocollen 1181 p 552 05].

In the cases Jacobus Manghelman and Hermannus Pingge It's not clear whether the addition 'van Rueremonde' refers to the former place of residence or a surname is intended. Hermannus is selling a house at the end of Hinthamerstraat.

's-Hertogenbosch, 05/07/1386: Johannes Peters son, Petrus Pouwels son, Gerardus Jans son and Henricus zvw Willelmus van der Lucht promised to pay Jacobus Manghelman ? son van Rueremonde 63 guilders pieter or the value with Sint-Jan upcoming (Mon 24/06/ 1387). 5.2.1 Medieval merchant family in 's-Hertogenbosch?

Several records of namesakes after 1386 concern merchants. In 1390-1392, Hendrik van Rumonde was the fourth largest trader in Cologne. He traded in spices and herbs. In fifth place was Matthias van Rumonde, who, in addition to spices and herbs, also traded in wine. Half a century later (1452-1459) Dirk van Rumonde is mentioned as a trader in ironmongery and leather in Cologne. It is explicitly stated that he probably came from 's-Hertogenbosch. Conversely in the archives of 's-Hertogenbosch the abbreviation 'Col' is sometimes also added to indicate that the person comes from Cologne.

All the merchants mentioned have namesakes with the same first name around the same period who are mentioned in the archives of Cologne. It may be the same people. <See chapter 4 on Cologne>. The oldest mention of a merchant in Cologne is Folmerus Roremunt, who became a member of the merchant guild in Cologne as early as 1130. Coincidentally, the first name bearers from Deventer were also traders in the same period who traded their goods (particularly wine) in Cologne and sometimes also lived there. An example of this is Johan van Romunde (the Rich), who was born around 1375. It is not unlikely that the name bearers from Deventer and those from 's-Hertogenbosch are also related and were part of the same merchant family at the time.

Merchants Judoci + Theodricus + Gerardi

The merchants' deeds from that time show too little coherence to establish a continuous line of blood relationship, but there are indirect indications that suggest a family connection. In 1389, a house on Colperstraet was described as a heritage of Theodericus van Ruermonde. Apparently he had already died by then and the house belonged to an undivided estate. Many colporteurs (after whom the street is said to have been named) have traditionally lived in this street. These are merchants who sell their goods at home, on the street or at another outdoor location. In 1409, goods were transferred to Theodricus Rurmunde from an inheritance from father Jodoci (Joost) by his sister and sister-in-law (his brother Gerardi had already died). Unfortunately, the property is not mentioned by my name, which makes it uncertain that it concerns the house on Colperstraet. Nevertheless, it seems likely that Theodricus is the grandchild of Theodericus. Suppose Jodoci was 65 years old at the time of death, then he would have been born before 1345 and his father around 1320. Theodricus is possibly the same person as Dirk van Rumonde; dealer in hardware and leather in Cologne.

In 1461, Dirck van Remunde lived in the same street and if it concerns Theodericus, he would have been about 80 years old at that time. However, in 1480 Dirck van Remunde still lived in that house and that would mean that he had become very old (100 years?). That seems less likely. This may possibly concern a next generation. In 1550, Jan Huiberts (unfortunately mentioned without a surname) sold a house in this street. It may be Jan Huijberts van Remunde who married Catharina. If that were the case, the house would have remained in the family for many generations, making Theodericus van Ruermonde, born around 1320, the oldest known ancestor of the now living families v. Rumund, v. Remun(d)t, v. Ruremonde and v. Roermund. Theodericus would be one of Dirick van Ruremunde tot Colen (= from Cologne) was a member of the Swan Brotherhood. Presumably this was the same person as the above-mentioned Dirik van Ruremunde. The Illustrious Brotherhood of Our Lady was founded in 1318. The reason for this was the emerging worship of the holy Mary in the city. The society is located in the Zwanenbroedershuis in 's-Hertogenbosch where they meet several times a year to discuss the veneration of Mary and poor relief. The Brotherhood also supplied from the 14

The Brotherhood also contributed to the development of 's-Hertogenbosch from the 14th century. Initially, only clergy were members. From 1371 others were also admitted. The members of the brotherhood mainly came from the Netherlands and adjacent German areas. Their names were noted in the annual accounts. In principle, members' names appear twice. First when paying their entrance fee and later when paying their death debt [Accounts Illustrre dear Lady Brotherhood, all with access number 1232 (BHIC)]. Dirck van Remunde enters in 1446 and in 1463 he deceased for the death debt is paid. <In 1447 Heilwich Dirck Colen's daughter also enters and in 1451 she died. Possibly this was his daughter. The illustrated coats of arms with the family coats of arms of the sworn brothers are special. There are no arms of Van Ruremundes in it and they probably did not belong to the nobility. To be a member, however, you had to be nominated by a member and that only happened if you had money and influence. The following table lists the namesakes who were members.

Merchants Jan van Ruermunde and Iannez Ruermunt founder of the Miracle book

The next entry from a namesake dates from 1386. The source in this case is special. It concerns the "Miracle book from Onse Lieve Vrouwe tot 's-Hertogenbosch". This book played an important role in the Marian worship of 's-Hertogenbosch. According to tradition, the worship began as follows:

A young stonemason servant found a ragged statue of the Virgin Mary in the workshop of St. John's Church. They find it ugly and wanted to smash it. However, this was prevented by the pilot's master. On Maundy Thursday 22 March 1380, when gravediggers wanted to place all the statues in the church near the Holy Sepulcher (as was the custom at that feast), the young stonemason brought the statue of Mary, but the gravediggers refused to place it. They thought the statue was ugly, old and poorly executed. After a year, a brother wanted to take the statue from church. However, the statue seemed to become so heavy that he could no longer lift it. Mary apparently did not want to leave the church. Soon afterwards (in the summer of 1381) a number of miraculous healings took place and these were attributed to the Blessed Virgin Mary. The reports were recorded in the Book of Miracles. The book contains 481 miracles dating back to the year 1603, listed in 594 verses. The rhyme chronicle starts in about 1422 and is attributed to the name bearer Iannez Ruermunt by Bekout alias Iohannez Rurmunt. The original manuscript has been lost, but there is still a copy available from 1550 which is preserved in the St. John's Cathedral. It is difficult to dispute that Iannez is the author. After the title verse the introduction follows where each sentence begins with a letter of his name. The "u" is written here as the Roman letter "v". In verse 434 up to 448 he does something similar and calls himself "IOHANNEZ RVRMVNT". Roughly translated and interpreted to match the first letter of the sentences:

I n the first place I want to exist
o nly to love our holy Mary
A nd in this poem, I want
n o one to feel hurt
N ot even I should forget
e verything that has to be concerned
S o the Lord should hear my prayers
r ise and guide us welborn God
v ia the chosen virgin, e ternally blessed she is
r ich and pure for evermore
M other of God, we praise You

u n pon your grace from above
T ow we hear and obey You
v his city recognize You from a rious clear signs send by You
n nd all people will know
B one of us, Mary, will ever foresake You
e rave and true we will pray to You
k ach one serving You faithfully, o een to deliver us from evil so the v riginal sin will be relieved and t anity will no longer lead us
his I hope, give us your grace

The holy Sweet Lady soon became the patroness of the city. Its status was also reflected in the fact that the city's privileges and charters were traditionally kept in the chapel of the Sweet Mother. For centuries it has been a place of pilgrimage for worshipers of Holy Mary. By writing the rhyme chronicles, Joannez made an important contribution to the Marian worship in the Duke City.

Also from a historical perspective it is interesting to know who Ioannez Ruermunt van Boekhout, the founder of the miracle book, was. The addition "Van Boekhout" in the name seems to suggest that Ioannez came from a village in another part of the then Duchy of Brabant (now Belgium). In any case, it must have been someone who could write and was familiar with chronica techniques of that timeperiod. At the time, these skills were retained to a limited group of people. G.C.M. (Lucas) van Dijk performed research to answer this question. He thinks that the author concerns Johannes de Bocholdia, who was prior in 1447 of monastery of the Augustijner-Koorheeren at Mariënborn near Arnhem. Also the Canon Jan van Roermond in Averbode is a suspect. He produced the tax books there between 1360 and 1380. In later times this abbey can be associated with the worship of Mary in 's-Hertogenbosch.

Another option is that it concerns the merchant Jan van Ruermunde, who is mentioned in miracle number 436. This verse describes a story from 08/09/1386. Merchant Jan van Ruermunde in Neuss (West Germany) lifted a heavy beam together with others and broke his thigh. The leg poked out through the skin. The next day he sent his friends to church and the announced his pilgrimage to Maria van 's-Hertogenbosch. He would not eat meat until the time of the pilgrimage. The next day he was healed and completed the pilgrimage. From a transcription of 11/4/1439 (see § 4.2.2) it turns out that there is a Mary monastery in Neuss where Nicolaas van Ruermund is prior (possibly Nicolaas is Jan's son).

If Jan and Johan are the same person, then he only started writing 36 years after his miraculous healing. Of course, it could also be that the writer Ioannez was inspired by the story of a miracle told in his family; for example by his grand. In any case, it is remarkable that as an object of pilgrimage Jan does not choose the, considered very sacred, Cologne Cathedral where the relics of the 3 kings from the Bible story are said to be located since 1164.

's-Hertogenbosch, 14/03/1387: Henricus Pape van Oerscot and Johannes gnd Scepens soen van Ruermunde promised Willelmus van Berze shoemaker 50 light shields, 12 Dutch slices for 1 shield, with the octave of Easter approaching (Sun 14/ 04/1387) to be paid. [Idex op de Bossche protocollen 1177 f350v].

's-Hertogenbosch, 13/12/1501: Maria, daughter of the late Johannis, son of the late Johannis de Breyel de Ruermundis, natural son of the late Willelmi, natural son of the late Willelmi Svolres de Gemart, with his guardian, a hereditary contract of half a measure of rye from the Buscoducis, payable via inheritance Purification and delivery in Buscoduci from a good meadow called Dasschot, located in the parish of Oisterwyck, after the place called Udenhout, between the inheritance of Willem van den Hezeacker and the children of the late Wolter Berthoutz. and Hille Hacken and her children from one and between The inheritance of Gerard Bey from another, than the above-mentioned agreement, the said Johannis, the former son of Johannes de Breyel de Ruermunde, to the said William ... [R1270, p. 220r].

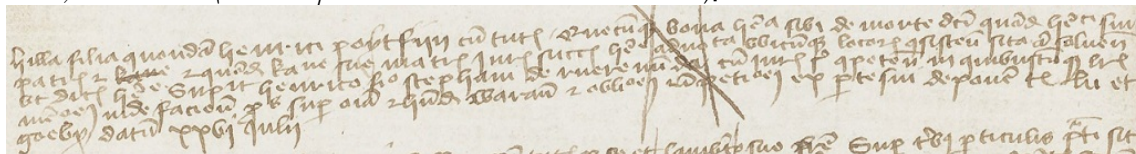

Merchant Matthias

In the Regesten 's-Hertogenbosch, Matthias is hardly mentioned, probably because he lived in Cologne. It probably concerns the very wealthy merchant Matthias van Roermond (alias van Ruermunde) who was married to Druda. He would have been born somewhere between 1320 and 1335. In 1390 he ranked fifth in excise tax on his trade in spices, herbs and wine. Further information can be found in paragraph 5.2.1.

5.3 Main lineage Stephanus (± 1370)

The next entry concerns Henricus van Rueremunda who will have been born around 1400. His father Stephanus could have been the merchant Henrik van Rumonde, but no proof is found. The deed from 06/10/1323 about the issue of the house Oude Huls(t) to wine buyer Stephanus [Tafel vd Heilige Geest no. 145]. It seemed to indicate that he could be the father of Henrik van Rumonde and that he was preceded by Stephanus Henricus (without family name) [see the deeds of the Table of the Holy Spirit of 28/07/1311 (no. 65), 17/12/1315 (no. 93) and a charter of St. John from 09/04/1312 (no. 5)]. The deed from 19/03/1352 [Table of Holy Spirit no. 349] however mentions the issue of a house and yard on the Audehuls by Stephanus, the late Ywanus' son. So Stephanus is not a son of Henricus, but Ywanus van Grave ("de Gravia"). Ywanus had first married Margaretha, with he had the children Jacobus, Ywanus and Margaretha. From his second marriage to Elysabeth he probably got the aforementioned Stephanus. Ywanus was master of the Tablet of the Holy Spirit [see deed from 18 April 1342]. In the aforementioned deed from 1311, Henricus Stephanus also seems to have a relationship with this institution. In 1419 a Steffen Joest van Ruremonde is mentioned (zie §). And in 1472 a Stephan in Cologne (§ 4.2.2).

In summary, the following hypothetical family tree can be built from the previous transcripts:

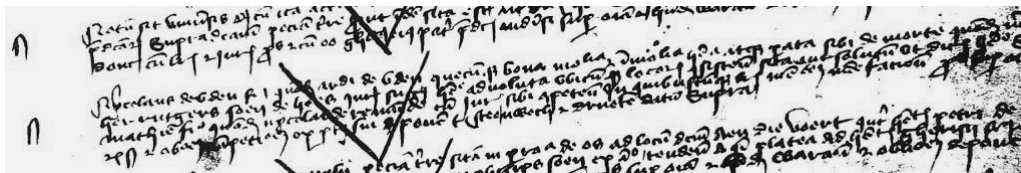

5.3.1 ~ Nycolai (± 1395) + Philips (± 1340) + Frederik

A contemporary from the previous paragraph who also lived in Gemert, is Marten. He was a member of the Teutonic Order there. The orwho was founded in 1190 in Palestine during the Third Crusade. It was a spiritual knighthood whose purpose was to nurse sick and wounded crusaders and to fight against the Muslims. Two such orders of knighthood already existed, the members of which combined the monastic vows of poverty, obedience and chastity with the medieval knight ideal of fighting for the church and the weaker members of society. These were the Order of the Knights Templar and the Order of the Johns (also known as the Maltese Knights after their headquarters). To become a member of the Teutonic Order one had to be of nobility. By 1400, the Teutonic Knights had reached its peak with its own state, encompassing the north of present-day Poland and the Baltic states. The "Christianization" by the fighting monks consisted in their mass killing or christening the indigenous, pagan, population. To take the vacant places, the knights mainly sent German peasants from the west to these parts. The Orwho was also active more to the west. For example, local branches were set up in Gemert and Vught, which were called commanderies. These settlements were much more peaceful than those in the east. Here it was more about clergy who ruled parishes (and of course through tithes and other property helped the Order to earn income). The Order therefore made a distinction between knightly commanders and priestly commanders. Vught belonged to the latter category. The commandery at Vught was destroyed in the Eighty Years' War (c. 1603) and after the Peace of Munster the commandery was dissolved and the management of the properties then went to the commandery in Gemert.

Since Marten van Ruremunde is a member of this order, he must have been of nobility. It may be the same person who was alderman of Venlo between 1436-1455 and who also has a family crest. There are no indications that he is related to the name bearers from 's-Hertogenbosch.

5.4 Main lineage Jodoci (±1350)

The main lineage of Judoci (Joost) forms the lineage of current namesakes. The first two to three generations were still merchants or at least had a higher education. The lineage is determined via their real estate. The merchant Theodoricus and Dirck are probably the same person. He owned a house in the Colperstraat that later came into the possession of his grandchild Dierick. The son of Theodricus/Dirck was Geryt. This was probably the same person as Gerard who had property in Herlaer near Gestel, which later passed on to his grandson Huijbert Janssen. This person was mentioned without a surname. Jan was probably the son of Geryt/Gerard. This Jan was probably the same person as Jan Gerrits who is mentioned without a surname and owns a house in the Ortenstraat that ended up with his grandchild Jan Huijberts who was married to Catharina.

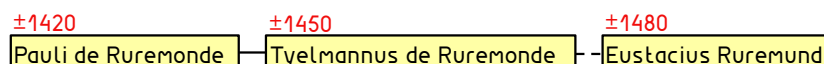

In the coming decades, the deeds of the 's-Hertogenbosch protocols between 1405 and 1500 will be transcribed, allowing the above image to be verified.

Pauli + Tyelmannus + Eustacius

Huijbert Jans^(±1490)

It is uncertain whether all the entries below can be attributed to the same person. Between 1567 and 1577 there is a time jump of 13 years in which no transcriptions are known. This is an indication that Huijbert died around 1567 and the entries from 1577 concern his grandson. In addition to the deed from 1519 regarding the real estate in Gestel near Herlaer, the entries between 1523 and 1529 regarding properties from Sint-Oedenrode are also interesting. There is talk of the ownership of a house. It is known that Jan's son is going to live in this village. Possibly because he is assigned the house (and land) in an inheritance.

Jan Huijberts van Remunde (±1520)

The oldest transcription in the family line is that of Jan Huijberts van Remunde who was married to Catharina Nicleas Jans (van Vugt). This is a mention from the baptismal register and dates from 1572. It is unknown whether Huijbert had any more children besides Jan. If Jan is the firstborn, then Huijbert's father was most likely also called Jan. Both Catharina and Jan Huijberts will have been born around 1520. Catharina was previously married to Herman Peters. Jan and Catharina live in the house "In de Dorrenboom" in the Vughterstraat in 's-Hertogenbosch, which they bought on 14-05-1593. It probably concerns Vughterstraat 6. In 1623 this house would still have stood there under the name "Het Dorreboomke". According to the current numbering, the location would be numbers 14 and 16. His (presumed) ancestors previously also owned property in that street.

Huijbert van Remunde (±1550)

Jan and Catharina only had one son who they call Huijbert (after Jan's father). Huijberts Jans van Ruremonde first marriage is with Margriet Henxctheuveel. This marriage does not produce children. His second marriage is with Margriet Potteij, daughter of IJgrom Potteij (Potey) and Lucia <Source for her parents: Genealogy-kreutzwald.de>. According to Ad W.M. Teulings an alias of her mother Lucia is Sijke Lambert Arnoud van Veen. His sources are however unknown. Jan owns property near the Tolbrug that was presumably previously owned by Huijbert (1490). In 1587 Jan Diericx van Remund also bought a house in that street, making it more difficult to determine whether the later generations inherited Jan's original property or the house bought later by Jan Diericx. In 1604 Corstiaen van Remunde has a house in the Tolbrugstraat and in 1705. The same property is probably sold by Guertien van Strijp, the widow of Huijbert van Rurmond. A certain Reijnier Jacobus van Roermond also owned half of a house in this street in 1708.

's-Hertogenbosch, ??/11/1582: Hubert Jansse van Ruermond 7 guilders annually from the house in de Hintemerstraet [Index on Bossche protocollen, inv.nr. 1405, p. 14v].

Some mentions without family name that possibly concern Huijbert van Remunde. Striking is the mention of proceeds in 1584 from a house in Hinthamereind. Henricus son of Stephanus acquires a house in the same street in 1315, but the long intervening period makes it unlikely that this house always remained in the family's possession.

In 1602 Huijbert Jans dies and leaves three infants; Aelken, IJgrom and Jan. (The name IJgrom is probably an alias of the name Jerome or Jeroen). Four years later, Aelke is an adult unlike her brothers. In those days maturity is reached by the age of 25. This means that she must have been born around 1580. Her father was married twice and will have been born around 1550 and her grandfather around 1520. Aelke marries with Rogier van Berckel.

From the order in which her brothers are listed, it can be concluded that IJgrom is the second child. But if we look at the birth years of his descendants, it seems more likely that his brother Jan is firstborne. The name IJgrom (Ygrom, legrom, etc.) seems to be introduced for the first time in the family tree of the Van Ruremondes by naming him after the father of Margriet Potteij (IJgrom Potteij). Name bearers of the Potteij's were administrators in the city at the time. It is not known whether Margriet is a member from that family, but here family seems to be wealthy because her brother was buried in the St. Jan cathedral of 's-Hertogenbosch.

's-Hertogenbosch 26/06/1608: Rogier son of late Laureijns van Berckel husband and guardian of Aelken his wife, daughter of late Huijbert Jans van Ruremonde and Margriet daughter of late Igrom Potteij. Lambert Igroms and Huijbert Wouters guardians over Igrom and Jan minor sons of Huijbert van Ruremonde and Margriet aforementioned, divided the inheritance of the goods of late their parents: in Gestel near Herlaer, in the Bosvelt, Nuland and Woensel; also rent, lease and tributes. [Rechterlijk Archief 's-Hertogenbosch 1854 p41 p. 268].

From the previous records the following family tree can be derived:

5.4.1 Lineage Van Remund(t), Van Rumund(t) and Van Ruremonde

The first child of Huijbert Jans van Ruremonde and Margriet Potteij was Aelken. Then Jan follows who is named after his grandfather. Not much is known about him. Between 1621 and 1626 Jan Huijberts was Witnesses of a child's baptismal a number of times. Presumably he plays the role of brother-in-law. If that is correct then his wife's possible surnames are Heijnissen of Vaeldre.

[Schepenbanken Sint-Oedenrode, toegang 7636, inventaris 112, p. 117].

Jan probably had two children, of which Huybert Jans van Roermond will have been the first. The second child may be Aert Janssens van Roermond. Huybert marries with Guertien Jans van Roij van Strijp. (Aert is a witnesses their wedding). Before her marriage Guertien lives in 's-Hertogenbosch. From the deed from 1654, the family composition of Geurtke's parental home can be deduced. Her mother is Catalijn Ruth Cluijtmans.

Sint-Oedenrode, 1654: Jan son of deceased Goort Jacobs as husband and guardian of Tanneken hiswife, daughter of Jan Hulsen and Elisabeth his wife. [Oud Rechterlijk Archief Sint Oedenrode, Inventaris 116 jaar 1654 p. 189].

Huybert and Guertien have given notice of marriage on 21/09/1658 in Sint-Oedenrode and they marrey on 13 October of that year. He is called "young man" in the deed, which means he was unmarried. They both are from "Roij", <= St.-Oedenrode>, Geurtke lived in 's-Hertogenbosch. There is also a second deed about this marriage. It mentiones that they already had a son of 8 years old before they got married. He is called Joannes. This boy (who later became married Maria Dircx shoemakers) was born somewhere between 21/09/1649 and 21/09/1650 and was initially out of wedlock. Also in the original deed of Huybert's will thirty years later (1679), it is stated that Jan was conceived by Huybert.

[Nederduits gereformeerd ondertrouwboek, 1e deel, 1650-1740].

Although Huybert is mentioned in the first act as from "Roij", he was not born here. A deed from 1664 shows that he was born in 's-Hertogenbosch and that his wife was born in Sint-Oedenrode.

The testator together with the first children of the testator agree that a field is sold in Olland from the first husband of the testatrix. As compensation, the testator transfers a grassland to them that he inherited from his parents, located in Houtem, of which his wife will receive the right of inheritance. Jan (the son of Huybert and Guertien) was probably born in 's-Hertogenbosch, where his mother lived at that time. After his parents got married, he probably moved to Sint-Oedenrode, where his father lived. Jan may be a merchant and so frequently traveled to other places and needs a document to identify himself. The transcription below, the certificate of good conduct, was issued by the aldermen of Sint-Oedenrode. These child's statements are often used by traders.

Sint-Oedenrode 25/05/1679: We Jan van Heeswijk and Jan Kempts aldermen of the freedom of Sint Oedenrode Witnesses, state that this is done for just truth, within our profession as aldermen, to declare that Jan, son of Huijbert van Remund here within freedom in first bed was conceived by Goortien Janssen van Strijp. The petitioner has always lived here during the life of his father, and has faithfully compartmentalized himself <= behaved> as an honest young man ought to do, without anything that pleads against him. Therefore requesting that if our certification will be shown, to recognize the appellant as an honest young man, who will bring us honorable service and friendship, with good fair trade of the appellant as well as his honest parents will acknowledge, all without arguing or ruse. We afore mentioned aldermen have sealed this document and let it sign by our secretary on 25 May 1679.<Transcriptie door Wim Verheijen>.

Jan marries with Maria Dircx shoemakers. Their first child is Hubertus (baptized on 4 October 1684). Later they have also four daughters (Joanna, Theodora, Helena and Helena).

Huberts Joanneszn van Remunt and Elisabeth Hubertus van Boeckel have five children. Their descendants are quite easy traceable via the digital transcripts from the BHIC's DTB registers (www.bhic.nl). The first Generations are shown in the following figure. The subsequent Generations ramify too far to be able to be displayed graphically. Therefore they are described textually in a paragraph later on.

Family coat of arms?

Around 1950 Gerardus Alexander Christian (Gerard) van Ruremonde, son of Johannes van Ruremonde and Margietha Agatha Ockhouseen (Greetje Ockhuijzen) ask a heraldic office to design and register a family crest. A description of the coat of arms of Merten van Ruremunde (mayor of Venlo in 1435) was probably used as a starting point. However, Merten's coat of arms has the weapon iron turned a quarter turn and the star is only three-pointed. Gerard was told by the office that no one could claim this weapon anymore. This does not seem to indicate that this weapon was taken because of the similarity in the surnames, rather than on the basis of consanguinity.

Almost the same coat of arms is wielded by Lauri van Ruremonde, son of Michiel van Ruremonde and Johanna de Vaan. He is married with Pieterneel van den Brandt. The description of that weapon is: Shield of gold with in the middle a mill iron of red. At the top of the shield a star of black. The helmet mark is a grille helmet. The flight above the helmet is closed. It appears that Onsenoort Abbey made the coat of arms after the example of the coat of arms that Johannes van Ruremonde had made. The original coat of arms would be a red shield with a gold-colored mill iron with the star and helmet being blue. But on an image the star turned out to be gold and the helmet silver.

Nowadays everyone can create a family crest and have it registered if desired. Only when a weapon has been carried by one of the ancestors or one of his relatives in the male line, the descendants may also use that weapon.

5.4.2 Lineage Van Roermund

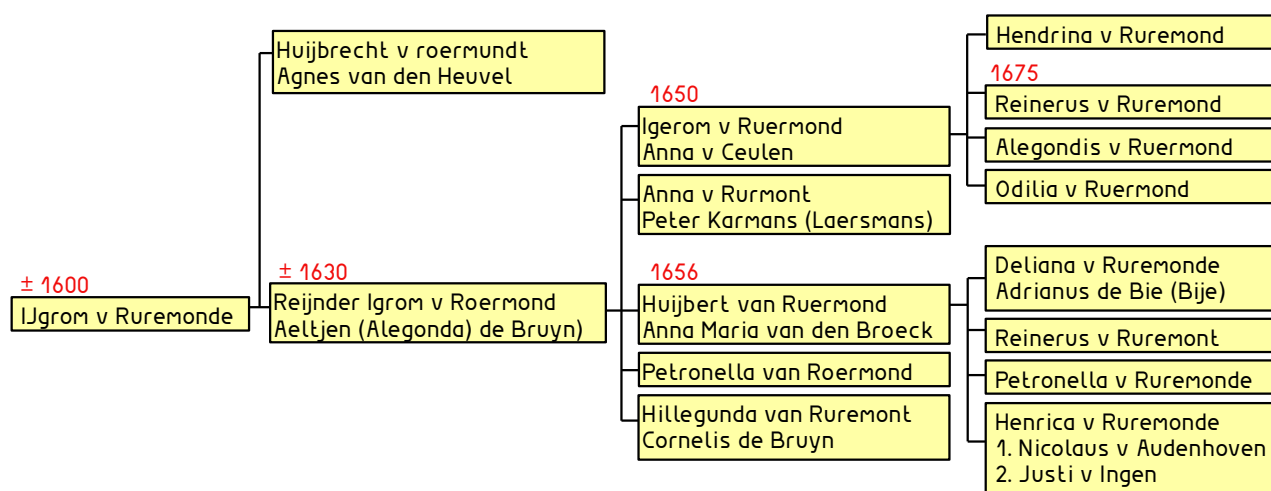

IJgrom van Ruremonde (Ilgrom van Roermond), second son of Huijbert and Magriet Potteij, marries with Hilleken. They had two sons. Huijbrecht marries Agnes van den Heuvel and Reijnier marries Alegonda de Bruyn.

Huijbrecht van Roermundt x Agnes van den Heuvel

From the certificates below it can be concluded that Agnes van de Heuvel (daughter of Willem Jan van den Heuvel and Elijsabeth van Rode) was first married with Marten van de Gracht / Graeff. They had a child named Gijsbert. When Marten dies in 1664, she remarries with Huijbrecht van Ruermonde. As far as known, this marriage produced no children. Agnes dies in 1680. Gijsbert marries with Cathalijn van Berlicum daughter of Aert Aerts van Berlicum and Jenneke Jensen Looden. Jenneke later on remarried to Evert Andriessen. Cathalijn dies in 1672, and her two children are left without parents.

's-Hertogenbosch is a garrison town, where the soldiers have to be accommodated in the citizens houses. The financial compensation is regulated in the capitulation treaty of 1629. The list of quarters shows that Egram van Ruerond (Egram van Rurmunt) lives on 31/10/1701 in a house at Hinthamereinde and in 1704 the widow of a certain Jacob van Ruermond lives in the same street. Huijbert van Ruermond lives from 1676 to 1679 on the Markt <= market square>. After his death his wife continues to live there from 1687-1706. In 1709 she lives together with tailor Johannes Fesie (Tesie) on the Vughterstraat. Zij is still called the widow of Huybert van Ruermond. Apparently she has not remarried. Pieternel also lives between 1703-1706 on the Vughterstraat. Presumably she remained onmarried. Her brother Reijnier van Ruermond lives between 1699 and 1701 at the Hinthammerstraat. Jan van Rurmunt also lives in this street. In the same time segment, a certain Dirck Cornelissen van Ruermond also lives on the Markt in 's-Hertogenbosch. Igerom and Huijbert are both sons of Reijnder.

The sons of Huijbert and Igerom both have four children. The only male is named after their father Reinerus. Their children will later use the name variant "Van Roermunde". Igerom van Ruermond and Anna van Ceulen eldest child is called Hendrina, followed by Reinerus, Alegondis and Odilia.

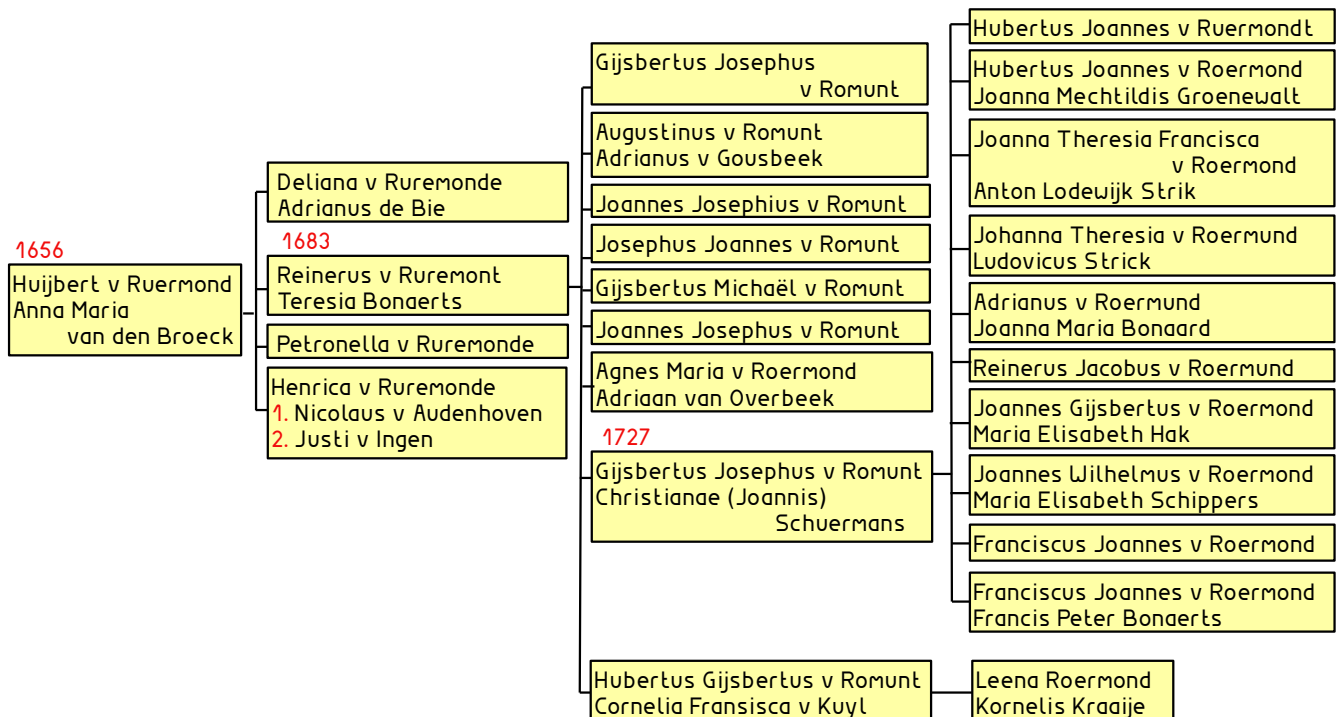

's-Hertogenbosch, 13/09/1674: Hendrina van Rueremond, daughter of Igerom van Rueremond and Anna van Ceulen has been baptized. Witnesses waren Cornelis van Ceulen and Catharina de Bruijn [DTB-055].

[Dorpsbestuur and schepenbank van Bokhoven, beschikkingen and verzoekschriften nr 562].

Hubertus (Huijbert van Ruermond and Anna Maria van den Broeck have four children. Reinerus Jacobus van Ruremont and Adriana Teresia Bonaerts take care of the offspring that are now called "Van Roermund". The children of Hubertus and Anna become orphaned early. On 28 December 1687 a serious illness leads to the death of Hubertus. The fact that Hillegonde had viewed the willcould indicate that she wants to arrange the care of the children of her brother.

's-Hertogenbosch, 28/12/1687: Hubertus van Ruermonde, at 's-Hertogenbosch. The testator is sick. [Bossche encyclopedie inventaris: 18/05/1688 N 2817 p. 187. 28/12/1687 [N2817 p. 154].

In april 1650 a certain Huijbert van Ruermonde married with Anna van Wolfswinkel (wedow of Ros) is mentioned [Bossche protocol, inv. Nr 1650B, p. 171v]. For now it isn't clear who this person is. Possibly Anna is the same person as Anna Maria van den Broeck.

6 Genera v. Remunde, v. Remonde and v. Rumonde

These families are mainly craftsmen, especially in construction. When there is insufficient work in their place of residence, they travel to places where work is available and stay there for several months.

6.1 Progenitor masons Piet Korst (± 1420)

Kors is probably a son of Pieter, but Heynrnix is also an option. (They may have had the same father and both named their first son after him.) He is the progenitor of a lineage whose relatives worked in construction. Kors was a bricklayer and also performed some manual labour. His descendants developed in the direction of slate layers.

The entries below appear in the city accounts of Gouda. Since the surname does not appear in the baptism, marriage and burial registers or other deeds from that city, this suggests that Korst is living elsewhere. Possibly he is temporarily residing in this city because work is available. (Not all entries without surnames included).

6.1.2 ~ 's-HERTOGENBOSCH: slayers Gieliemus Sixtus

The transcripts from approximately the same period show a branch that begins with Jan Gielis van Ruermonde. He will have been born around 1540. He is a slater. The slaters sometimes used roof lead tabs, marked with personal characteristic icons. Unfortunately, no roof lead tabs with markings have been found for this family. According to L.C.M. Peters, archivist of the Sint Jan cathedral, no marked tabs were found in 's-Hertogenbosch at all. According to Paul P. Steijn, an expert in marked tabs, the use of these markings is reserved for the areas above the Rhine. As far as he is aware, there are no defying tabs of the Van Ruremundes. Also there are none markings on tabs known with a mill iron, lily, cloverleaf or Gelderland rose.

6.1.3 ~ OUDENHOORN: Dankert (± 1580)

In 1571 Johannes and Maria de Huesden had a daughter Maria. Johan has Stoffel as patronymic. A descendant of this Stoffel is possibly the father of Dankert from Oudenhooorn.

's-Hertogenbosch, 30-05-1614: Abraham has been baptized son of Jacobus Egidij. [GAHt, DTB-050].

The name Dankert possibly came into the family through the marriage between Stoffel v Rumonde and Catelyne Danckaerts from Middelburg.

Middelburg, 13/11/1572: Aldermen in Middelburch declare that Gheertruyt Fynaerts, widow of Marten Martens son, parishioner in Noortmonster, draws up her will, she donates to the poor and the prisoners of the city each with 10 shillings gr. and the guesthouse with 5 shillings gr. and all goods that she now has and may obtain later, will be donated to her cousin Catelyne Danckaerts daughter, and her husband Stoffel van Rumonde. 6.1.4 ~ GEMERT: slayer Anthonis Wolffs (± 1525)

In 1563, a certain family Wolffs van Remunde/Remundt is mentioned in the old judicial archive (ORA) of Gemert (see municipal archive of Gemert). The first records concerns (An)thonis Wolffs van Remunde who is married with Catarina van Beeck, and his brother Willem Wolffs van Remundt. Anthonis is a slayer he has a foster son called Jan Wolfs van Remunde, possibly from a previous marriage of Catarina. According to Simon van Wetten, who provided the transcripts from the ORA, the family was originally called Wolff and came from Roermond. The fact that no relationship could be established with the Wolff family living in Gemert before 1563 provides some support for this hypothesis. Another indication is that both brothers do not appear to inherit real estate in Gemert from ancestors. Incidentally, it could well be that their father was called "Wolff" by his first name. The fact that they are slayers also suggests that there is a relationship with the Van Rumund / Van Remunt / Van Ruremonde / Van Roermund family who stayed in 's-Hertogenbosch around that time and of which some members had the same occupation. There is also some evidence that these families were in contact with each other.

Anthonis Wolffs van Remunde seems to have lived elsewhere with his family for several years. On 28/04/1579 the aldermen testify that the familie have lived and worked in Gemert for 17 years. Around 1555 there is an Anthonis Leydecker <apronym for slater> working in 's-Hertogenbosch, it could be the same person. After 1582 the name Van Remunde and Van Remundt no longer occurs in Gemert. The name changes into the name Leijdeckers <also apronym for slater>. A family tree can be derived from all available transcripts. All the main transcripts are listed below.

7.1 Historical context in Deventer

Excavations show that the location of the current Deventer has been a Germanic settlement. Since the 9th century it has been a permanent residence. The IJssel played an important role for the fishermen, farmers and traders who settled there. In the second half of this century the Bishop of Utrecht fled from the Vikings to Deventer and founded a deputy court, which made it a religious center within the diocese of Utrecht. Royal coins were minted since the end of the 10th century and since 1046 these became episcopal coins. In the 11th and 12th century Deventer was one of the most important trading places in what was then Lower Lorraine. In the second half of the 12th century, the diocese was split in two by the occupation of the Veluwe by the Duke of Gelre.

Presumably the city joined the Hanseatic League at the end of the 13th century. This was an alliance of cities that, almost independently of their lords, concluded trade agreements between them. Deventer was a port city. Large ships can navigate inland via the IJssel here. The Schipbeek was commissioned by the city to make navigable to Münsterland for smaller river ships. The city had important trade contracts with the Norwegian Bergen, the Danish Skåne and the German Rhineland (Cologne). The city also had imperial German privileges such as the minting of gold coins. The city reached its economic peak in the Middle Ages. For centuries five large markets were held annually that lasted for weeks and attracted interest far beyond the Netherlands. In the 14th century (1334) the city was hit by a major city fire. In 1376 the first name bearer settled in the city. In the 15th century (1456) the Regional Hanseatic cities resisted the candidacy proposed by the Burgundians for the bishop of Utrecht because he wanted a more centralist-led politics with less privileges for the cities. Philip de Goede, Duke of Burgundy, then marched with his army from Utrecht to Deventer and conquered the city. This marked the beginning of the decline of the power of the Hanseatic League in the northern Netherlands. Deventer did however become an important center of spiritual reform. Erasmus came to the city for a short period of time because of the highly regarded Latin school. All the intellectual activities attracted other initiatives. In 1477 the first printer Richard Pafraet from Cologne settled in the Lange Bisschopstraat. Around 1500 the city became Northern Europe's most important humanist printing center.

The successive series of conflicts and the radically changing balance of power led to a decline of the city in the 16th century. Deventer became a front city for two long periods. In the first half of the 16th century, the Burgundians fought with Philip de Goede and the Habsburgs with the emperors Maximilian and his son Charles V for domination of all northern regions of the Netherlands. The Sticht (the diocese of Utrecht) and the Oversticht (Groningen, Friesland, Drenthe and Overijssel) were subjugated. There was also war at sea, whereby hijacker letters were issued to allow each other to board and loot ships from each other, which harmed trading. In 1528 the bishop of Utrecht transferred secular power to Emperor Charles V. For higher politics and possible court cases one now had to turn to the Habsburg court of the governor, which was located in Brussels and Mechelen. In 1566 the Deventer city council recognized the right of Protestants to practice freely. The Spanish king opposed this and in 1568 sent the governor duke of Alva with an occupation garrison of 900 Walloon soldiers. This started the Eighty Years' War. In 1570 William of Orange made an unsuccessful attempt to take the city by surprise. Two years later he tried again with raids by the watergeuzen. Zutphen and Kampen, among others, were conquered by the insurgents. Deventer remained Spanish because there was a strong garrison stationed there. The city was not captured until six years later. In 1587, the English commander of the State garrison returned the city to the Spanish. In that same year, Prince Maurice began his conquests and in 1591 Deventer was conquered for the second time in the Eighty Years' War. After the occupation of the city by State troops, the Republic controlled the IJssel as a transfer stream and the administration of the city was definitively in the hands of the State Party. However, the city was badly damaged, depopulated and impoverished. It had definitely lost its position as an economic and religious center, although annual fairs were still held until well into the seventeenth century.

7.2 Progenitor Ruthger (± 1345) van Ruermunde

In the late Middle Ages and the beginning of the Renaissance, Genus Van Romunde / Van Romondt settled mainly in the cities along the river IJssel. From south to north there are the following cities: Arnhem, Zutphen, Deventer, Zwolle and Kampen. Branches of this family also settled in Doetinchem along the Oude IJssel. The first records of this genus had different spellings, similar to the first members of the genus Van Rumund / Van Remunt / Van Ruremonde / Van Roermund from Brabant. Up to now, there doesn't seem to be any blood relationship between both genders. Consanguinity can however not be excluded, but a common origin would have to lie before the birth of Ruthger van Ruermunde. According to a document from 1376 he acquires citizenship of Deventer against payment and is not of noble birth. This is the first record of a name bearer in Deventer. The birthplace of Ruthger is unknown. Namesakes with this first name appear in Roermond in 1259 and in Vienna in 1390. But the city of Cologne is a serious option, although this given name was not found there. Ruthger was a contemporary of Jacob van Romunde, the father of Johan van Romunde ("the rich"). Presumably they both come from Cologne. Jacob could be related to Ruthger, but it is not clear. The descendants of Jacob are therefore treated in a separate chapter (see chapter 8).

Ruthger resides in the Lange Bisschopstraat in Deventer. Since the available transcripts are fragmentary in the 14th century, this fact becomes an important indication of his pedigree. It is striking that the first name Ruthger isn't used when his son names his children.

Deventer, 1376: Ruthger van Ruermunde obtains citizenship of Deventer against payment. He lived in the Lange Bisschopstraat. In 1917 W. Draaijer, investigated the given names appearing in the Aldermans accounts of Deventer from 1337-1393. In it, the same Ruthger van Ruermonde is mentioned as a non-noble citizen of Deventer. [Maatschappij der the Nederlandssche Letterkunde te Leiden, Tijdschrift before the Nederlandssche Taal-Letterkunde, uitgegeven vanwege de Maatschappij der the Nederlandssche Letterkunde te Leiden, deel 36, nieuwe reeks 28e deel, pp. 177-197. Leiden: Brill.]

Deventer, 1391: Catharina van Romunde was fined for 10,000 tichelstenen. She also lived in the Lange Bisschopstraat at Deventer [Beernink, 1982].

In the previous family tree, the solid lines indicate indisputable relationships and the dotted lines the debatable ones. The question mark is a hypothesis. The stated years are estimated birth years.

Rutgher probably had two children. Just like him, Catharina and Hendrik lived in the Lange Bisschopstraat.

Deventer, 1460: Hendrik and Herman van Romunde, living in the Lange Bisschopstraat win their office as sworn Meenten van Deventer are delegated to Coevorden to resolve a dispute between both cities [Beernink, 1982].

Deventer, 1469: Act in which Bishop David of Burgundy, as arbitrator, gives judgment in the dispute between Dean and Chapter and Henricus de Remundis, vice-procurator of the church of Zwolle, on one hand, and prior and convent of the Predikherenklooster in Zwolle, on the other hand, about the establishment of said monastery and about the parish rights of the church of Zwolle. [Kapittel van Lebuinus, Aanvraagnr. 90062 – 33. N.B. Also see inv. nrs. 32, 34 - 37. Register der stukken in de secretekamer voorhanden I, 11. Charterlijst 575. 1 charter Aanvraagnr. 90603]. <A vice-attorney acts on behalf of a clergyman>.

Deventer, 1489: Receipt from dean and chapter to the executors of the will of Hendrik van Remunde, canon, for the payment of some annual interest and tithes of the ten Hogenwegen estate in the parish of Raalte and for payments following the management by Hendrik of the office of the factory, chorales and omnium [Kapittel van Lebuinus, 1 charter nr 88 Aanvraagnr. 90066].

Hendrik probably had a son Herman who married Styne. She also lived in the same street. Henricus was a canon of the church of Zwolle. In the deed of 1481 the descendants of Herman and Styne are mentioned. Since this concerns the notarial archive of Kampen, it is plausible that this family lived in Kampen by then. Herman was probably born in Deventer and had a daughter and three sons with Styne. In 1380 and 1422 a certain Styne is also mentioned in the archives of Cologne.

Cologne, 20/04/1422: Record of Styne van Remunde [Best. 160 (Armenverwaltung (AV)), U 1/1557A].

In the division of the inheritance of their parents, none of the children needs a guardian so they will all have been adults by that time. The youngest child (Andries?) Will be born before 1450. His father Herman was born at least before 1425. Assuming he may have reached the age of 70, 1410 will be a better estimate of his year of birth.

Kampen, 23/03/1481: Deric, Andries and Elsken Hermansz declare that their brother Johan Hermansz has handed over to them the estate and inheritance of their parents, Herman van Ruermunde and Styne, for which they thank him with promise of indemnification; However, he still has to pay his sister Elsken 100 Rhine merchant guilders and 20 kromstaart as soon as she asks for it. [Notarieel archief Kampen, RAK 75-II p. 119v].

Their son Jahan was probably the same person as the Johan who later married Lyze. Indications for this are that they also lived in the Lange Bisschopsstraat and that both their children were also called Herman and Styne and were therefore probably named after their parents. Their descendants later fulfilled many administrative functions such as mayor, alderman, and bailiff. In 1602 the VOC was founded and in 1622 the West India Company. Diederik Johannes van Romondt left for the West Indies in 1801 and started a line of overseas administrators there. Although some descendants were elevated to the nobility because of services rendered, they did not originally belong to the old nobility. There are examples where people entered into marriage ties with the old nobility. For the further lineage see paragraph 7.5.

7.3 Main lineage Deric van Ruermunde

One of the three sons of Herman and Stynen was Deric. He possibly had two sons. The first one was Probably called Willem or Geert. The second one was Jan. This Jan had a daughter presumably called Anna. Possibly he had some other kids to.

Willem or Geert (this remains unclear) could be the father of Hendrick van Remunt who was married with Elisabeth (presumably with the surname Ruysch).

7.3.1 ~ UTRECHT/ZUILEN: Hendrick (^{±1500}) van Remunt x Elysabeth Gerrits (Ruysch ?)

To clarify Hendrick's pedigree hypothesis, we first discuss his (presumed) sister Geertruida. Gijsbrecht van Nyenrode 3 had no children with his wife Eleonora van Borselen-Sint Maartensdijk. His mistress Geertruid Uytenhum however gave him a bastard daughter Adriana van Nijenrode (1430-1477) and a bastard son named Hendrik van Nyenrode (1435-1519). Hendrik becomes bailiff of Abcoude, which means that he has leased the marshal office of the Nedersticht of Bishop David of Burgundy. He married in 1470 at the age of 35 with Hillegond Ruysch. She is the daughter of Pieter Ruysch, alderman of Utrecht and Mechteld Meermans. They had 1 daughter and 1 son. The son's name was Gijsbrecht van Nyenrode, who held the office of marshal in Amersfoort and Eemland for 24 years. In 1467 his father lent him 2 farms of land in IJsselstein and in 1473 a house in Hoorn. The daughter was married with an unknown Van Rumunde (Remunde).

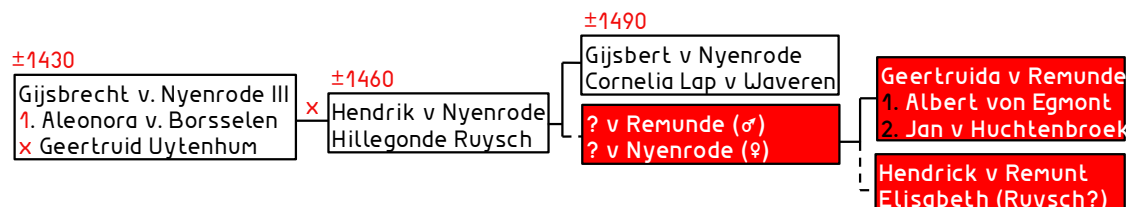

The deed below ties in nicely with the above information. Geertruida's father isn't mentioned. Her mother's first name is also not mentioned, but her family name is Van Nyenrode. If her uncle is indeed Gijsbert van Nijenrode, then Geertruida is undoubtedly the daughter of the previously mentioned (unnamed) Van Remunde.

Breukelen, 20/01/1527: Mr Jan van Huchtenbroek for Geertruida van Remunde, his wife, on hand-over by Gijsbert van Nijenrode Hendriksz., her maternal uncle, possibly to l to the feudal lord, 6 p. 30. The fief has died. [Repertorium op de lenen van de hofstede Nijenrode 1352-1677, door J.C. Kort]. <Jan is Jerusalem pilgrim in 1542. He was of noble birth. His coat of arms was an ordinary hemispherical shield, divided. 1: in gold a black prancing unicorn; 2: in gold four wavy crossbars laden with twelve golden stars (4-3-3-2) <The homestead Nyenrode is located in Breukelen>.

Putten, 04/09/1533: Henrick Plaetman and Luyken Bruyns, aldermen of Deventer, issued certificates that Master Frans van Ruremunde and Liefken, his wife, sold an annual interest of 3 golden Rhine guilders from their two houses on the Waterstrate in Deventer to brother Arnt van Venlo. [Regesten Gelders Archief, Afschrift in inv.no. 40a, folio 61vso].

Mr. Frans v Ruremunde
Liefken

The transcription above shows that Geertruida was married with Jan van Huchtenbroek (Johann von Hüchtenbrock) and also that she was related to the family Nijenrode. A family tree on the internet shows that she was previously married to Albert von Egmont. At that time she is called Gertrud von Remunde. The above data can be summarized as follows:

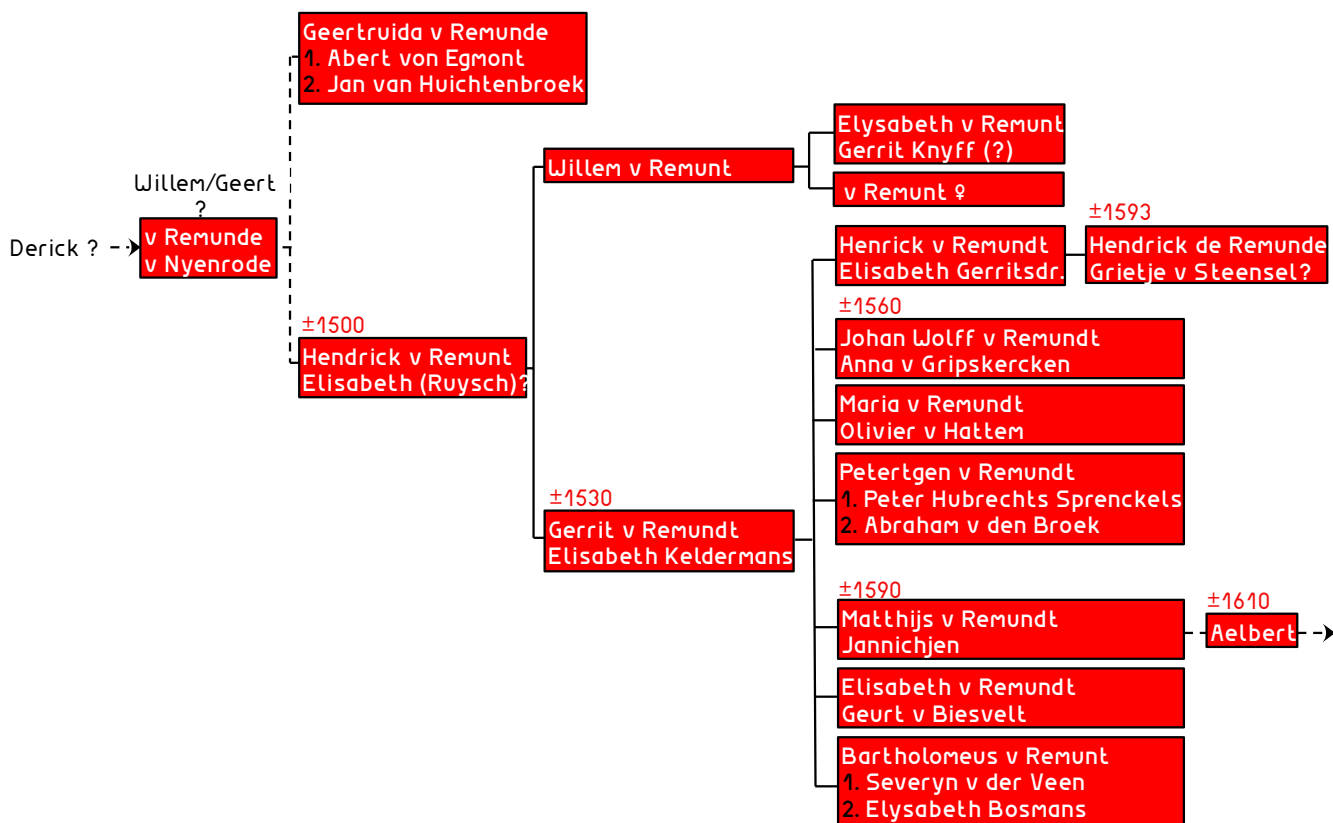

In 1522, a dispute arose over the dowry of their mother (in law) between Gijsbert van Nijenrode on the one hand and Johan van Huchtenbroek and Geertruida van Remunde on the other. [Inventory of the Twickel house archives, 1133-1975]. If Hendrick is indeed her brother, it is remarkable that he did not get involved in the conflict as well. After Geertruida dies about 1530, her husband Jan remarries with Maria van Egmond. <Extra information: Willem Jan Adriaan van Romondt born 29/10/1798 in Utrecht and married with Anna Carolina Georgetta Magna van d'Yvoy was lord of Nijenrode from 1849 to 1851. He did not acquire the estate through inheritance, but bought it from GJ Schroyestein's widow by Johan IV Ort>.

Little is known about Hendrick van Remunt. He is married to a certain Elisabeth, possibly Elisabeth Ruysch. He likely had a sister whose first name remains unmentioned, but presumably it concerns the aforementioned Geertruida. Hendrick could have been named after his father's father and that would mean that his name was Hendrick (alias Derick, Derck or Dirck). It may be Derick the son of Herman van Ruermunde and Styne (see § 7.2 about Progenitor Ruthger van Ruermunde in Deventer).

Hendrick van Remunt and Elysabeth Gerrits (Ruysch?) Call their children Gerrit and Willem. Gerrit is probably named after his mother's father and Willem is probably first borne and named after his father's father. The Van Remunde who was married to Van Nyenrode is therefore probably called Willem or Wilhelm.

Utrecht, 11/05/1589: Will of Elysabeth Gerrits, widow of Henrick van Remunt. Heir is their son Gerrit van Remunt. [tgs.nr.: b34-4 Notarissen in de stad Utrecht 1560-1905, Akte 462, Inv.nr U001a001].

Hendrick van Remunt died before 11/05/1569. His wife Elysabeth Gerrits (Ruysch?) draws up her will as his widow. She left bequests to the two daughters of her son Willem Hendrickszn. who died in Spain. One daughter of Willem was called Elisabeth and lived with Elysabeth and the other was still in Spain with her mother. Elysabeth is 1638 widow of Gerrit Knyff in Utrecht. The other son of Hendrick and Elisabeth was Gerrit van Remunt.

Gerrit van Remundt (Remunt, Gerard van Remunde), was born around 1530. He married in December 1566 with Elisabeth Mercelisdr Keldermans, born on 31/12/1547 and died on 04/04/1612 (buried 05/04/1612). Elijasabeth's father was the famous master builder Marcelis Keldermans (± 1500-1557). Marcelis Keldermans was probably born in Mechelen around 1500. His place in the family tree of the Keldermans family is somewhat unclear. Probably he was the son or the architect Jan van Mansdale Keldermans, and the grandson or Antoon 2 and thus a great-nephew of Rombout 2.

Moers, 1580: Complaint for injury. In 1580 Caspar von Grotthausen, Rudolf von Drachenfels and others, captured Gerhardt von Ruremond, a native of Utrecht, and brought them to Moers. The prisoner begged Adolf, Count of Neuenahr, Moers and Limburg for protection against the violence. The count had him removed. The case was subsequently heard before the court in Moers. Due to the importance of the case, Scholtis and the jurors of Moers wanted to seek further advice. Even before the judgment of the court was reached in June 1581, Grotthausen and Drachenfels turned to the higher court in Neuss, who referred the case back to the court in Cologne.

Subsequently, the Cologne commissioner referred the matter back to Neuss. What happened then is somewhat unclear, but presumably the accused was released on bail after he had been imprisoned for a long time under martial law.

Gerrit was a master with a licentiate degree in both rights <ecclesiastical and secular> and became bailiff in Nijmegen [bibl. G.A.U. No. 2808-7x]. When he left the Maerschalcamp of 't Overquartier, he was rewarded with a special rank for loyal services by the States of Utrecht [resolution 1 March 1580]. On that ground he was nominated by the bailiff of Utrecht Nicolaes van Zuylen van Draeckenburch and appointed as submagistrate (also called subcount) of the city of Utrecht. He took his oath on 22/06/1582 [BAU 2, 3257]. From 14/04/1583 to 14/08/1593 perform this office with which he was also responsible for the city prison, under the Utrecht city hall. [Utr jaarboekje 1903 p. 38]. He is then called master Gerard van Remunde [De Nederlandssche leeuw jaargang 101, 102, 104-106].

In 1594 Gerrit van Remunt was appointed by the "Landraad beoosten Maze" as a scholtis of the regiment of Count Willem van den Bergh, governor of Gelre. This position is comparable to the head of the aldermen's bank ("Gerichts Schultz"). He was expected to rule on civilians. Later, the case law on military discipline against soldier misconduct was added to this. In the Duchy of Guelders, the mercenary jurisdiction continued until 1590. However, the central government organisations dominated by Holland gained increasing influence. Incidentally, the council had little authority in the rebellious regions. The office of the magistrate was probably no longer maintained after Gerrit. He died around 1610/1611.

Utrecht, 13/04/1613: Johan Wolff van Remundt and Joffr. Anna van Gripskercken, his wife, Joffr. Maria van Remundt because of late Jo. Olivier van Hattem, Abraham van den Broek, been married to Petertgen van Remundt, mitsgaders the same Petertgen before her self and as her mutual represent and represent before Henrick Henricxen van Remundt, here brothers soon still immature, joint heirs off Gerrit van Remundt and Elisabeth Keldermans, both died, transfer to Johan van Oort, cameraar from this city, and Adriana van Nellesteijn, his wife, all household goodse and hoffstede in the Winstege here.

The deed of transfer of 13/04/1613 (see earlier) shows that from the marriage of Gerrit van Remund and Elisabeth Keldermans 7 children were born. In this document the youngest children are not listed with there given name. These can be derived from other deeds.

1. Hendrick van Remundt, married with Elisabeth Gerritsdr.
2. Johan Wolff van Remundt, welke was married with Anna van Gripskercken.
3. Petertje van Remundt married with Abraham van den Broeck.
4. Maria van Remundt married with Oliphier van Hattem.

5. Matthijs van Remundt (?)
6. Elisabeth van Remundt, married with Geurt Jaspers van Biesvelt.
7. Bartholomeus van Remundt married with Elysabeth Bosmans.

The eldest son Hendrick married Elisabeth Gerritsdr. (daughter of Gerrit Jans). From a deed of 13/04/1613 (see below) it appears that he has already died. Their only son Hendrick is not yet an adult. Presumably he moved to Amersfoort when his mother remarried there. His second cousin Anna Elisabeth who was married to Marcus van Essenhogen also lived there. There was a Henrick Henrickzn who married Grietje van Steensel. But if it is the same person then his father should have had a child at a very young age. This Hendrick Henrickzn has one son Gerrit with Grietje. Later on, there are some references to who could be Kendrick and Grietje's children.

It is not clear whether the marriage between Johan Wolff van Remundt and Joffr. Anna van Gripskercken produced children. Possibly they had a son named Gerrit. On 24-05-1606 Anna is mentioned as Jacob's widow and in the deed below no heirs are mentioned with the name Remundt. But possibly the children are deceased by then.

Maria married about 1604 with Olivier (Olivier) van Hattem who was born in Utrecht in 1572 as son of Dirck Aelberts van Hattem and his first wife Geertruid van Wese. Together they had four children (Melchior, Emanuel, Maria and Geertruid). He studied medicine and theology at Franeker, was vicar since 1596 and was deposed as vicar at Cillaarshoek in 1608. Later he became a Roman Catholic and eventually settled in Antwerp as a doctor. He died in Antwerp on 23/12/1610. He probably moved to Amersfoort when his mother remarried there to Dirck de Ham.

Antwerp, 18/11/1614: Maria van Remundt, widow of Olivier van Hattem, addresses herself with her son Emanuel [van Hattem], 19 years old, to the aldermen of Antwerp. Matthijs van Remundt married Jannichjen and had their son Aelbert around 1610. This Aelbert (Albert) is possibly the father of Mathijs van Roermonde who marries with Janneken van Roijen in 1651 who have six children and lived in Bergen on Zoom.

Bergen on Zoom, 13/06/1655: Matijs (Matthijs) (Mathijs) van Roermonde (Roermond) and Janneken (Jannichjen) (Jenneken) van Roeijen (van Roijen) <Noijs ?> have Maria van Roermonde in 1654. According to unconfirmed sources, a Cornelis Aelbertsz van Remund was also born in 1651. Given the patronymic "Aelbertsz", however, it seems unlikely that he is a son of Mathijs. Furthermore, a (second) Aelbert van Remundt is said to have been born in 1669.

7.3.2 ~ DEVENTER Jan Romunde (^{± 1730}) x Hendrica Modder(s)

Jan and Hendrica are only mentioned in the baptismal certificates of their children (see Genealogieonline.nl and openarchieven.nl). It has not yet been possible to link Jan Romunde, who was married to Hendrica Modders (alias Henderica Madden), to the main lineage. According to Beernink (1982), Jan is a descendant of Gadertz (Godert) van Romunde, who was born around 1470 in Deventer. The argumentation for this hypothesis is lacking and there are almost 3 centuries (about 8 generations) of missing descendants in between. Given the date of birth of his son, Jan was probably born around 1723 and his father around 1695. The name of Jan's son suggests that his father was also called Matthijs. Another clue could be Lubberdina's Lutheran beliefs. With the data that is currently available, the only logical option is that Jan is a son of Aelbert van Remundt (born circa 1690 in Utrecht) and Gijsbertje van Reijssel (born in Vianen). For now, the only known children of Matijs are his daughter Griettie (1715) and his son Albertus (1717). If there is a third child, then he could have been born circa 1719 in Vianen. However, Jan could just as well be an undiscovered person from Deventer.

7.3.3 ~ MAASTRICHT: Henricus Romunde (± 1723) x Marie Catherine Swinne

According to a source on Ancestry [<https://www.ancestry.com/genealogy/records/henricus-romunde-24-h5lnrw>] Henricus van Romundt (who was married to Maria Catherine Swinnen) would be a son of Albertus van Romundt and Jacomijntie van Essenhoofd. However, this seems unlikely because the son of Albertus was born in 1693 in Utrecht. It would mean that Henri was 60 when he had his son Wilhelm Maximilian and 78 when he had his last son Melchior. If the connection to this family line is correct, then a generation seems to be missing. There is a Henri who was born in 1727 in Maastricht. His parents were called Gerard Romunde and Maria Catharina Caekers, but there is no evidence that they were related. According to Ancestry.com he was born in Utrecht, but the listed birth year of 1693 makes this record unreliable.

Maastricht, 24/10/1727: Henricus Romunde has been baptized in the H. Martinus in Maastricht. His parents were Gerard Romunde and Maria Catharina Caekers (Kaekers, Kakers). Witnesses were Johannes Everard and Anne Opdencamp. [Source no longer traceable].

Maastricht, 09/05/1793: Henricus Romunde, partner van Maria Catherine Swinnen, dies. [<https://www.ancestry.com/genealogy/records/henricus-romunde-24-h5lnrw>].

Maastricht, 14/09/1802: Marie Catherine Swinnen, daughter of Guillaume Swinnen en Marie Catherine de Jacquier, died at the age of 78. Her partner was Henri Romund. [Historisch Centrum Limurg, BS OverlijdenBurgerlijke Stand in Limburg, Maastricht, archief12.059, inv.nr. 238, akte 436. (zie openarchieven.nl)]. <Her year of birth is therefore 1724,; The French first name Guillaume is synonymous with Willem>.

Anna Maria Romunde founded a foundation in 1867 with the aim of financially supporting future generations. The foundation paid out 50 current guilders upon request for the marriage of a family member. In order to determine whether the applicants are descendants, the foundation archive contains a family tree with dates and places of birth and marriage. [HASTK, Stiftungsarchive, Best 155 T Stammtafeln A122 Romunde]. The family tree starts with Max Wilhelm Romunde. On ancestry.com his first names are reversed and he is called Wilhelm Maximilian Romunde. This is more in line with the name of his grandson (Wilhelm Johann Nicolaus Hubert Romunde). Henricus' father must have been born around 1695 and there are now three options for what his name was: Gerard, Willem or Maximillian.

*Generation 7

Generation with living people has been removed.

7.4 Main lineage Andries van Ruermunde

The probable second son of Herman of Ruermunde and Styne was Andries.

Arnhem 24-01-1460: Wannemaker Andries van Rueremunde lives in Arnhem. [Oud Archief Arnhem, tgs.nr. 2000, inv.nr. 1221, p 18]. <This basket maker is probably another person>..

It is not certain that Andries had children. Possibly he had a son named Jan, but he could also be a son of his brother Deric or come from the line of Jacob van Romunde from chapter 7. At that time, an Andries also appears in the civil register of Arnhem [tgs.nr. 2000, inv.nr. 1221, p 18]. He is a Wannemaker.

Zutphen, 08/03/1525: The official of the curia of Traiectum instructs all the priests and others concerned to admonish Reygerus Witte and Johannes Remunde, residents of Zutphania, not to claim any rights in the estate and income of Lord Hermannus Pothoven, but to leave the executors of his will, in particular the vice-securities of the church of Sanctus Nicolaus in Traiectum, Cornelis Bonser and Petrus Hoptman, and the citizens of Traiectum Petrus Ludolphi and Jacobus Ghysberti [Regionaal archief Zutphen nr 600 inv nr 103]. <Traiectum = Utrecht>.

Utrecht, 09/05/1530: Theft. The bailiff Nyes..., Jan van Remunde's daughter, is suspected of stealing some parcels. This indictment was explained to her and read by the aldermen at the council house, so that she would know her rights. She prayed for mercy and stated that Aelbert van Leeuwen had declared to aldermen that he could no longer lay claim to these pressels. [Resolutien der Generale Staten uit de XVII, eeuw meer onmiddellijk betreffende de geschiedenis der beschaving, p139 Archief before kerkelijke and wereldse geschiedenissen, inzonderheid van utrecht 1848 dl.7].

There is only circumstantial evidence that he had a son named Willem. The entry below mentions Andries Willemszoon. Presumably he was named after his grandfather.

Utrecht 08/08/1618: Procuration concerning the transfer of the land of Niftrik including the other interested parties Andries Willemsz van Remunt, Dirck Andriesz, Reijnart Andriesz en Goort van Heck [Notarissen Utrecht, tgs.nr. 34-4, inv.nr. 128, p 51].

Andries ? -> Willem v Remunt - Andries v Remunt

The next mention is Wilhelmus who was married in his first marriage to Catharijna van der Horst and in his second marriage to Fijtgen Frericks. This could be a son of Andries Willemsz. Van Remunt. He probably has two children; Trijntje and Carell

Wilhelmus v Roermundt
1. Catharijna van der Horst
2. Fijtgen Frericks

--- Trijntje v Romund
--- Carell v Roermundt

Utrecht 1630: Marriage registration of Wilhelmus van Roermundt (previously married to Catharijna van der Horst) and Fijtgen Frericks (previously married to Dirck Jansen [Burgelijke stand Utrecht, DTB inv.nr. 95, p 104].

Utrecht 02/05/1732: Marriage registration of Trijntje Willems van Romund from Vianen and Dirk Baas from Lexmond [Burgelijke stand Utrecht, tgs.nr. 1231, DTB inv.nr. 30, p 96].

Utrecht 01/02/1701: Procuration to take an oath etc. in the trial against brother Harmen op de Kamp in Meurs. Constituent is Lysbeth op de Kamp, widow of Philips Cristiaen Gansert, living in Utrecht. Constituent is Carell Willem Roermundt, attorney in Meurs. [Notarissen Utrecht, inv.nr. 581, akte 54]. <Zou dit de broer kunnen zijn van Gerard Romunde en Maria Catharina Caeckers? Zie de naam van de getuige Anne Opdencamp>

7.4.1 ~ ZUTPHEN: Gadertz. v. Remunde (± 1445) x Marijken

The following deed shows that Gadertz (Godert) van Romunde has two children with Marijken. He dies around 1511. His son Matthijs van Romunde is then an adult and becomes guardian of his sister Marijken. Because he was already married in 1502, Matthijs must have been born around 1472. His father Gadertz must then have been born around 1445. Marijken remarries the carpenter Gheryt Zelndink. <According to Beernink 1982, these are the ancestors of Jan Romunde who was married to Hendrica Modders (see § 7.3.2). No explanation is provided on this claim>.

Deventer, 20/10/1511: Before the aldermen Mathys van Remunde and Marijken his sister with Mathys her brother standing, as with her as guardian. Declare that Gheryt Zelndinck carpenter and Marijken his wife and her mother have paid him well from the inheritance and the deceased's deeds that Pacheyt as the same because doing Gadertz van Remunde her blessed father. In some ways inherited and the arrived, and the thank him and his wife for that honor. Actum Lune post Luce.. [De Nederlandsse Leeuw 1910, p 141. Lieber Renunciationum 1505-1512 p. 350].

The following transcripts seem to indicate that Mathys moves to Zutphen and was married with Meyme and (presumably) later with Elske. Although it is not certain whether it concerns the same person. Mathys appears to have died in 1538, possibly a large family descends from this Matthijs that lived in Deventer until after the Second World War. After 1750 the family dropped the prefix 'van'. See pararaf 7.3.2

Zutphen, 26/04/1484: The oldest mention in the city of Zutphen of a name bearer concerns Philips van Ruermunde (weavers and builders). [Burgerboek Zutphen, arch.nr 1 inv.nr. 841, p8].

7.5 Main lineage Johan van Romunde (± 1435) x Lyze

Herman and Hendrik van Romunde lived in Deventer around 1460 to 1490 (see 7.2). Their house was located in Lange Bisschopstraat. This is a strong indication that they were descendants of Ruthger van Ruermunde. Because Johan van Romunde who was married to Lyze also became the owner of this house, they will probably be his ancestors.

Deventer, 1460: Hendrik and Herman van Romunde, living in the Lange Bisschopstraat in their office as sworn Meenten van Deventer are delegated to Coevorden to resolve a dispute between both cities [Beernink, 1982].

Deventer (?) , 1480: Brother Willem van Romunde lived in this timeframe.

's-Hertogenbosch, ??/okt/1485 - ??/09/1486: Joest die Cremer <peddler> van Ruermunde tailor, citizen of Deventer [Bossche protocollen p.168v].

The only indication that Johan van Romunde is related to Ruthger van Ruermunde because they all lived in the Lange Bisschopstraat. The transcription below shows he is the son of Jacob.

Deventer, 21/07/1450: Andries Bondi and Evert van Graes, aldermen, declare that Johan Jacobssoen and Lijsbeth his wife given usufruct to each other concerning the total of there legacy. After theirdeath of both they donated to the Minrebroederen for carpentry 2 Arnh. guilders for board 1 Arnh. gl., to the Groote kerk for carpentry 2 Arnh. guilders to the Groote kerk for carpentry 2 Arnh. gl., to S. Anthonis-gilde 1 Arnh. guilders to den Berg for carpentry 2 Arnh. gl., to the poor people atthe Heilige Geest of Groote Gasthuis 5 Arnh. gl., to S. Yorrien 1 Arnh. guilder, to poor people 30pairs of shoes to the Heer Stappeu huis 1 Arnh. guilders [Groote (vroeger Heilige Geesten-) and Voorster gasthuis te Deventer, 470HG].

Deventer, 09/10/1499: Willem Krijt and Henrick van Bulderen, aldermen, declare, that Johan van Remonde and Lijsbeth his wife sold to Henrick Meijntssoen the farmyard and house in the Nieuwstraat on the corner of the Diefsteeg, with the "pitgang" belonging to it, next to Johan van Graes, keeping the city 5 kapuinen for annual interest. [Groote (vroeger Heilige Geesten-) and Voorster gasthuis te Deventer: 783VG]. <Lijsbeth = Lyze>.

He may have studied at the University of Cologne in 1482 when a certain Johannus Ruremunds de Davantria was registered there. The quote below shows that the widow's (Lyze) testimony is in favor for her daughter Stijnen and her grandchild Johan ("oerre dochter Hermans kijnt"), as well as for the benefit of "oerre zalige mans natuurlicke sonne" Herman van Romunde. Lyze's son Herman owns a house in the Lange Bisschopstraat with his wife Grieta. (Probably the same house that was already inhabited by Catharina in 1391 and in 1460 by Hendrik and Herman.)

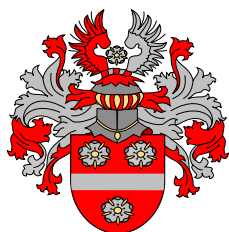

Roermond, 10/06/1460: In the presence of notary Johannes Dryvenare de Ruremunde and the witnesses Jacobus Miltter and Anthonius Olmer, Godefridus Miltter, dean, Thomas Fabrian, Alardus Trippemeker and Goeswinus de Nyvenhem, canons of the chapter of the Holy Spirit in Roermond, appeared. They had the transfigured deed read out and declared that the contents were in accordance with the truth. Thereupon Wynandus Haeck, canon of the chapter of Saint Servatius in Maastricht, paid the 180 Rhine guilders. Sealer: Chapter of the Holy Spirit. [HCL Toegang 14.A002B, inv.nr. 232]. <Dryvenare = Deventer>?

Deventer, 18/11/1510: Lyze widow of Johans van Remunde decided to give, according her will, to Stijnen her eldest daughter the big box in the room with everything in it. Item for the daughter of Herman son of Johan van Remunde 100 golden horns guildersg. Item for the son of Herman son of her husband, everything he has in use now, nothing excepted. Furthermore 50 golden guilders by weight ...etc... [De Nederlandsse Leeuw 1910, p 140, Lieber Renunciacionum 1505-1512 p. 271].

Zutphen, 09/12/1609: the word "children", in testamento ineter liberos, is also refurring to the fiefs, for child children. Statement from the court between Arnold van Ruermonde cum suis and Johan van Ruermonde..[Codex gelro zutphanicus ofte handboeck vattende het summier van veele saecken de politie...]. <Concerns the distribution of fief 't Holthuis>.

Herman must have been born around 1470. He first married Grieta and from that marriage he had two sons. His oldest son was Johan who he named after his father. His second son was called Herman. From his second marriage with Liesbeth he had a daughter Stijne who he named after his wife and/or his mother.

Deventer, 1539: Egbert Wullers and Gertrudt, married couple, sell to Jan Allerinck and Elsken, married couple, a certain annual interest from an estate and house on the Langerbisschopstraten, belonging to Hermen van Ruremunde, between the widow of Gert ter Loe and blessed Ewolt Keyzers.. [Liber Renunciacionum van Deventer, deel 1531-540, p. 450].

Herman v Romunde
x Grieta / Lijsbeth

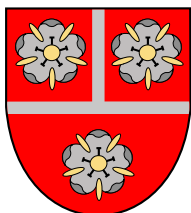

Herman later uses a coat of arms that is described as follows: In red a silver crossbar, accompanied by three gold-knotted and pointed silver roses, 2 from above and 1 from below. Facing helmet with red-silver feathers twist. Crest: a rose from the shield, usschen a flight of red and silver. Mantling: silver and red. This family coat of arms is also used later by various mint masters. Based on the description, the image below has been reconstructed.

Johan v Romunde
x Anna Schisters

That Jan (who was born around 1505 and married Anna Schisters) is the son of Herman is also evident from Jan's signet ring. This clearly shows that his family crest has the same origin. The crest is not clearly distinguishable and the helmet is slightly tilted to the right. The coat of arms in the shield is almost identical. Jan's seal contains a shield in three areas, each with a Gelderse rose and the text S. Iohan van Romvnde.

7.5.1 ZUTPHEN/DOETINCHEM: Jan (Johan) van Romunde (± 1505) x Anna Schisters

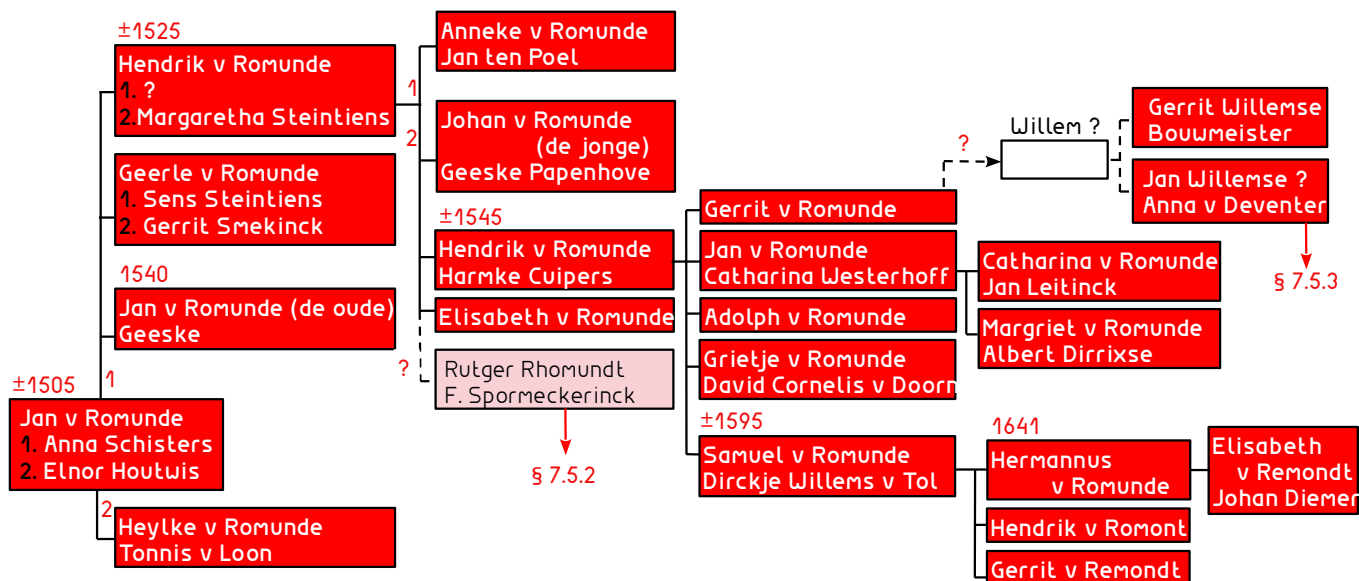

Jan van Romunde
(1574) x
Anna Schisters

Jan (Johan) van Romunde was born about 1505, probably in Deventer as son of Herman van Romunde and Grieta. Jan married Anna Schisters who was the widow of Mr Van Remmelt. Anna had a daughter from this first marriage. Jan lived with his first wife in Doetinchem. His son Jan was born around 1540 (on 15/04/1562 Jan's age is 22). His brother Hendrik and sister Geerle were probably born earlier.

Jan then leaves for Zutphen and marries there in 1540 with Elnor Houtwis. (His children in Doetinchem are probably already adults). With Elnor he had another daughter. Elnor had a sister named Heiltje van Diever(en) who was born around 1515. The family tree outlined below was mainly created on the basis of data from C.P.J. van Vlierden (1912).

Zutphen, 1540: Johan van Ruremunde groom and Eelvra Houtow bride. [Morgengaveboek nr 10, inv.nr. 621, p 112v]

Zutphen, 02/08/1540: Johan van Ruremunde gave Eelvra Houtow his wife 300 oude schilden from their respective property. [Zutphensche boek der morgengaven 30, 283] <This very high amount indicates a person of distinction. Houtow = Houtwys>.

Zutphen, 26/04/1542: Chairman and aldermen of Zutphen issued certificates that Johan van Ruremunde and his wife Elvere to Wynolt Houtow and his wife Else have sold their share in the house of late Henrick Houtow in Spiegelstraat. [Regesten 191 collectie particulieren nr 886].

Zutphen, 23-12-1544: Judge and aldermen of Zutphen declare that Johan van Deveren and his wife Heyle, Winolt and Elsen Houtow and Derick Houtow sell their house and yard in the Hospitaalspoort, bordering the city wall at the back, to Harmen Barner and Conrait Schlindewaeter, churchwardens in the Grote Kerk van Sint Walburgis, and they promise that Frerick Houtow, who is abroad, will honor this sale. Johan van Deveren is also the authorized representative of Johan and Elffer van Ruremunde, according to a letter of attorney sealed by Deventer. . Doetinchem, 25/10/1635: Gertruij van Romunde has been baptized. Here father is Jan van Romunde. [Doetinchem, Arnhem, archief 176, nr 508, folio 4.].

Doetinchem, 1643: Private deed of sale by Henrick van Eck to Medler and his wife Beatrix van Schaegen to Albert Derxs and his wife Gretien van Roermonde, of the property called "Die Gruitpoort" or "Hoetincks Campen", located in front of the Gruitpoort in front of the city of Doetinchem. [Oud-rechtrelijk archief Zutphen, nr. 861]. <Gretien = Margriet, Derxs = Dirrixse>.

In the mid seventeenth century the name "van Romunde" disappeared from Doetinchem. Margriet alias Gretien (Married with Albert Dirrixse) was the last name bearer in this city. The father was a certain Jan van Romunde who must have been born about 1562 and lived on the Homburgerstraat. This presumably concerns Jan van Romunde who was married to Catharina Westerhoff. An indication is that Hendrik Westerhoff acts as guardian for the children of Jan and Catharina in 1628 and that in the deed half a court in front of the Homburgerpoort is mentioned.

7.5.2 ~ BOCHOLT/AALTEN: Rutger Romundt (±1560)

Rothger's (Rotgeri) origins are still unknown. The following person may be related to the secretary of Bocholt, but he is not a public administrator.

Arnhem, 09/12/1500: In the Citizen Book it is stated that Rutger van Rueremunde is a tambourine [Gelders Archief, tgs.nr. 2000, inv.nr. 1221, p 79.].

There is also a Ruthger van Ruermunde in the archives of the Dutch Genealogical Society (N.G.V.), Achterhoek department [tgs.nr. 0584, inv.nr K072, p21], but neither a date nor a place is mentioned. Possibly his father was called Henderick (as was the first son of his grandchild). This Henderick would have been born around 1525. Rothger is a city clerk or city clerk. In this capacity he signs as a municipal official on behalf of the city, using the city seal. In this role he signs for the first time in 1602 [Amtsbücher nr. 739] and for the last time in 1616 [Amtsbücher nr. 744]. In addition, he also acted as a notary. Most German notaries were clergymen, city or court clerks, who as a writer only exercised their notarial office as a secondary occupation. This was done as a private individual with his own notarial signature or with a seal stamp. In this capacity he acts for the last time in 1624 [Amtsbücher nr. 722]. No seal of his own is known.

Rutger probably had two sons, Henrick and Jacobus. The latter was probably named after Jacob Spormeckerinck, the father of his wife. (Her mother's name is Gertruidt). The first son will have been Henrick and was probably named after his father who was born around 1525.

Bocholt, 15/05/1628: Rotger Rhomundt (Rutgerus Romondt) mentioned secretary of the city of Bocholt. [Volontaire protocollen Bredevoort 1628, p. 35v].

Mayor Rutger Romunde is possibly a descendant of the above-mentioned city clerk, but because the baptismal data of the church of St. Georg are only recorded from 1654, this cannot be proven. He married twice. With his first wife Hennesken (Henrike) he had three children and with his second wife Elske Reigers (Elisabeth Reyrß) he had five. Despite the fact that his son Gerard van Romunde and Gertrud Tacken had three sons and a daughter, the family name no longer appears in the baptismal registers (checked until 1742. It seems that Gerard moved to another place. Hendrina who is mentioned with her husband with Aldegung Silverding another daughter Hendrina Romunde who is the last namesake who (in 1722) had another child in Bocholt. The last mention in 1723 is about Jacob Romunde who has a dispute with his sister-in-law Gesina Sieverdinck about the settlement of various claims she has.

Hendrick Romunde (^{± 1625}) x B. v. Aelten + M. Hoexhorst

Henricus or Hendrick Romunde or Van Roermunde is first mentioned in 1653 in the settlement of an inheritance from the Grievinck family. His role is not entirely clear, but he must have been an adult and therefore born before 1625. In 1700 he had his last son Gerhardus with his second wife. He would then have been at least 75 years old, which seems unlikely. If he died in 1714 he would have been at least 90 years old. This suggests that there were two Hendricks, but the certificate to Anholt clearly states that Hendrick is the widower of Berentje.

Henricus married in his first marriage to Berentje (Berndeken, Brendeke or Berentjen) van Aelten, probably in Bredevoort. Berndeken was the widow of Jan (Johan) Grievinck, subguardian of Aelten, in 1655. She had two children from her former husband, Engele and Gijsbert. In his second marriage he married Margaretha Hoexhorst. Brother-in-law Jan Doenck (Doinck) from Aalten was married to Mechtelt van Romunde, the sister of Hendrick Romunde.

Henricus married his first wife Berentje (Berndeken or Brendeke) van Aelten. In 1655 Berndeken was the widow of Jan (Johan) Grievinck, subguardian of Aelten. His brother-in-law held the position of guardian there. Their daughter Hilleken later married Jan Doenck (Doinck) from Aalten. This Jan was then widow of Mechtelt van Romunde, the sister of Hendrick Romunde.

Henrick remarried on November 10, 1683 in Sankt Pankatius in Anholt, Westphalia, Prussia with Margaretha Hoexhorst. She was born there about 1658 as daughter of Gerhardus Hoexhorst. She is therefore about 18 years younger than Hendrick. Her father was the prince's steward from Salms to Aenholt. Hendricus is about 60 when his last child is born. About 8 years later he dies. 7.5.3 ~ KAMPEN: Jan Willemsen van Romunde (Roomunde) (^{± 1660}) x Anna Jans v. Deventer

Jan Willemsen van Romunde (Roomunde) and his wife Anna Jans van Deventer settle in Kampen. Considering his second name and the nicknames of his first sons, his father was probably called 'Willem'. Zijn opa zou dan Jan of Gerrit kunnen heten. Gerrit from Doetinchem, son of Hendrik van Romunde and Harmke Cuipers (zie § 7.5.1) is possible candidate.

Older records of other name bearers in this city are those of Kerstken <= Chris (toffel)> from 1474-1479, from 1480-1493 from Johan (Jan?) Van Romunde, in 1481 from Phillips van Ruermonde, in 1485, and in 1520 until 1543 from Hendrick van Romunde, 1521-1522 from Femme van Remunde and in 1536 from (probably another) Johan van Remunde. The Library and collections of the Dutch Genealogical Society (N.G.V.), Achterhoek department, contains many relevant references to namesakes (mainly Romunde). These can be accessed digitally via www.ecal.nu, but the references often lack all context, such as place and date of the deeds.

Jan Willemsen was born about 1660, Possibly in Gorssel (Between Deventer and Zutphen). A century lays between the first records in Kampen and the estimated year of birth of Jan Willemsen. It is therefore unlikely that there is a direct relationship with these old name bearers and Jan Willemsen. Presumably his father (Willem?) Was born about 1610 and between 1635 and 1658 (?) moved from a nearby place (Zwolle?) to Kampen. At his first marriage Jan is called "young man of Kampen" and at his death "Wedr. Van Kampen". His first marriage with Geertje (Grietien) van Grol is said to have taken place on 14/04/1658. (Beernink, 1982). Incidentally, the name Groll is also mentioned on 31/12/1599 when Mechteld Bartol's daughter of Groll remarries in Tiel with Abel du Fijen. Her first husband Michiel van Ruremonde had already died a year before [Trouwboek Tiel, inv. no 1447, p 360]. There are no indications of a relationship. If Jan is named after his grandfather, then his grandparents could hypothetically be Jan van Romunde and Elisabeth Vermaeth.

Kampen, 18/11/1707: Comparanten couple Willem Leusinck and Maria van Gogh declare to oweto the Gerrit Scheppinck and Jan Willemsen van Romond guardians over the children of Jan Berentsen Bulter an amount of 200 guilders c.g. at 5% per year. As a special collateral they propose their house, between Beekeeper and Smit. <In the margin> on 26/09/1712, the guardians transferred the confession of guilt to Mayor P. van de Weteringe with all the associated rights; on 30-01-1740 Dr. Fabius says he has received everything on behalf of the heirs of de Weteringe [Notarieel archief Kampen, RAK 99, p. 459v, nr 1013].

The name Willemsen is an indication that his father was called Willem. The first names of his children are also an indication. He probably had a brother Gerrit Willemse who was mayor of Kampen in 1706. A few years before Diderick van Romund who was married to Gertruit Forckenbeeck was mayor. This suggests that they were related to each other. Diderick was the son of Diederik and Pieterkje Schuurmans. Before his mayorship in Kampen, Diederik worked as a mint master in Zwolle. Their son Erasmus would later become mayor in Kampen.

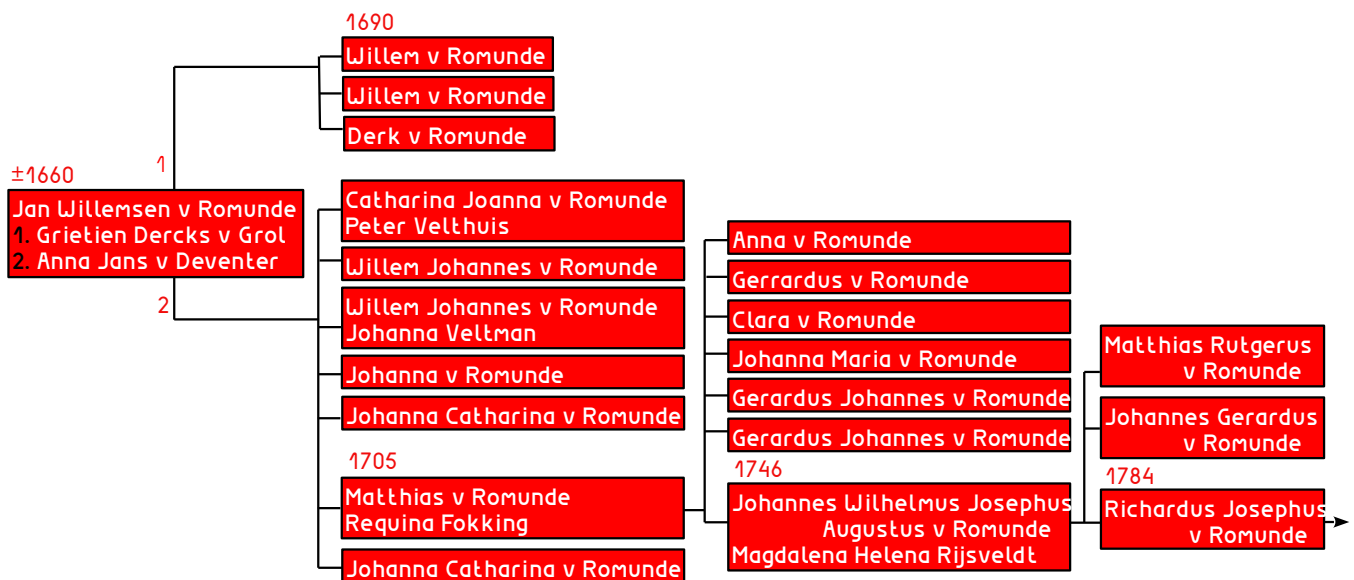

Kampen, 21/01/1706: Gerrit Willemse van Romonde is guardian. [Notarieel archief Kampen, RAK].

Kampen, 14/06/1706: Mayor Gerrit Willemse van Romond is mentioned as the owner of land. [Notarieel archief Kampen, RAK].

Kampen, 22/04/1706: Swaantjen Bouwmeister widow of Gerrit van Romunde, requests that she is allowed to build an emergency stable next to the house located on the corner of the Heijlen steegje that she and her late husband bought, on condition she remains to live there. [De Apostillen der Stad Campen and haar Jurisdictie inv. Nr 201, p. 45].

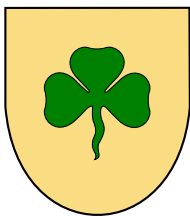

Jan Willemsen married two times. The first time in the Bovenkerk with Grietien Dercks van Grol and the second time in the Pastoorskerk with Anna Jans van Deventer (van Deinster) on 12/04/1696. From the first marriage 3 children were born: Willem, Willem and Derk. There may have been a fourth child named Derk. This child would then be his first borne. However, this is uncertain because the relevant deed mentions Jan Willemsen Roo as father of Derk. This family name is also found in Kampen and it could be that Derk is a Child of another marriage of Grietien. All four children probably died young.

Seven children were born from the second marriage. The children of Jan Willemsen were "affluent and well respected". Matthijs, Johanna Maria, Willem and Jan Willemsen are mentioned in the notarial deeds in the period 1759 and 1792 as surety and creditor. At the time, there was an almost anti-Catholic mood in Kampen. It is remarkable, this family managed to build and maintain their prominent position while their father had passed from Reformed (?) To Roman Catholic.

Only two sons and one daughter of the seven children of Jan Willemsen and Anna married. Two of these marriages remained childless. Matthias van Romunde and Requina Fokking produced (seven) children. Only the youngest married (Johannes Wilhelmus with Magdalena Helena Rijseveldt) and just one of the three children survived (Richard). After four Generations he was the only one left. The family tree is shown graphically below.

The coat of arms of the family in Kampen is completely different from that of mint master Jan van Romondt. The mint masters use three (Gelderse) roses, while in Kampen the cloverleaf is used, likewise the arms of the city Cleves. Based on a stained glass window (donated by the doctor Aemilius Antonius Maria Hanlo and his wife Maria Walburga van Romunde) in the Sint Willibrord church in Utrecht, the coat of arms of the Van Romunde family has been reconstructed around 1900.

7.5.4 DEVENTER: Herman van Romunde (± 1470) x Grieta

Otto (1182-1207)
Graaf van Gelre +
Zutphen

Herman v. Romunde
(geboren: ± 1494)
x Grieta

Herman's coat of arms resembles that of Otto the Great 1182-1207, Count of Gelre and Count of Zutphen. This coat of arms is possibly derived from the coat of arms of Boulogne, over which his older brother Gerhard 3 exercises military rule through his marriage to Ida of Boulogne. Otto I's coat of arms is said to be a variation on this theme. It has the same colours (gold and red) and the spheres have been replaced by roses. The roses are common in the Lower Lorraine area of the archbishopric of Cologne. Later, these roses are called medlar flowers or Gelderse roses. The base of Herman van Romunde's coat of arms resembles that of the counts of Leuven (red background with a silver bar), but without the three flowers. The flowers are often called roses, but according to some they are stylised medlar flowers (Mespilus Germanica rosaseae). Considering the name of the plant, it seems more likely that it concerns the stylized flowers of the Guelder rose (Viburnum opulus). Coat of arms: In red a silver crossbar, accompanied by three gold-knotted and -pointed silver five-petalled flowers. A prominently placed silver lattice helmet, red lined, gold bordered, with gold bars, around the neck a gold cord, to which a gold medallion, with silver-red roll and red-silver helmet cloths. Crest: A flower of the shield between a red silver flight.

Herman has two sons with Grieta; Jan and Herman. According to the Nederlands Adelsboek (1916). Herman brings the fiefdom 't Holthuys. When his son Herman dies around 1544, his widow determines that her fiefdom 't Holthuis or Lincksgoet or Wyntyensgudt under Angerlo (feudal to the Keppel family), will be divided among her six children. A lawsuit about this later arises between the heirs and her brother-in-law Jan van Romunde who was married to Anna Schisters and Elonor Houtwis respectively. See Wijnaends van Resandt (1911), Van Vlierden: (1913), p197 t/m 200, Beernink, (1982) en Nederlands Patriciaat (1921). Even much later (1609) there remains disagreement about the interpretation of the division of the fief. If the alternative name 'Wyntyenguat' is related to the family of his wife, then he could be related to the Wyntyen family. The substantiation of the surname 'Rademaicker' of Grieta is missing. It could just as well be Grieta Wyntyen. A remarkable coincidence is that a certain Elisabeth van Ruremonde was married to Johan van Holthuysen in Venlo in 1430.

Deventer, 1539: Egbert Wullers and Gertrudt, married couple, sell to Jan Allerinck and Elsken, married couple, a certain annual interest from an estate and house in the Langerbisschopstraaten, belonging to Hermen van Ruremonde, between the estate of Gert ter Loe and blessed Ewolt Keyzers. [Liber Renunciationum van Deventer, Deel 1531-1540, p. 450].

Deventer, 12/09/1586: The widow Herman van Ruremonde has a house in the Lange Bisschopsstraat next to that of Wynolt ter Loe. [fol].

The house on the Lange Bisschopstraat that Herman and Griete lived in, becomes the property of Gerrit and Aeltgen. His brothers and sisters sell their share to him. After he dies, his wife sells the house, which disappears from the family. The family of Herman and Griete becomes clear from the transcripts below.

Deventer, 12/04/1561: <Aldermen> Marckel and Scherff. Gerrith van Remunde and Elisabetha are leading sister with her brother. Her guardian sells Johan Veltkamp and Jennecken his wife. five golden guilders for the rights to the annual interest that is paid annually on Easter from her share in the yard and house located in that lange Biscopstrate between the yard and house of Miss Ten Loe on one side and Peter van Geseke on the other silk. Sant Augustinus guilded 1½ golden guilders and light ..? .. annual interest and otherwise every time his right. Continue another Lofftallen times with a hundred guilders R.g. of weight or the right to it, and with all interest up to then if it was canceled six months before. And in the event that this forward collateral of its property is not found good, the leading sellers may at all times make a better offer. [De Nederlandsse Leeuw, 1910, pag. 141. Liber Renunciacionum 1559-1569 p. 71].

Deventer 12/04/1561: <Aldermen> Doijss and Snel. Henrick van Remunde, Hillecken van Remunde the widow of late Johan van Remunde, Stijnecken van Remunde, and Lijsken van Remunde these three with their tutor sell to Gerrith van Remunde and his heirs their other share they have in the yard and house located in the Lange Biscopsstraete between Peter van Geseke, and Miss Ide ten Loe lying on either side. Hailing from Sunt Augustinus, 1½ golden guilders and the V light guilders ...? ..., and Johan Veltkamp five golden guilders guilded annual interest, and otherwise his right each time. And when they still have two immature children Henrick and Harman from her death sister Jennecken van Remunde who also have a right to the house mentioned above, so the vendors aforementioned promise to guarantee at all times that she had reached her adult years, and will also retify this deed [De Nederlandsse Leeuw 1910, pag. 141, Liber Renunciacionum 1559-1569 p. 96].

Deventer, 26/05/1572: <Alderman> Bruynss, Hugo van Vaersevelt and his wife Bartha and Gerrith van Loenen and his wife Catharina declare that on 27/05/1574 they sold an amount to which they were entitled, hereditarily acquired, to Willem Berentss on behalf of the previous son Jan van Remunde of his deceased wife Hillecken Wintgens. They also obtained five golden Rinsche guilders of weight with the rights of annual interest, if these are annually receivable, obtained from a separation and division of estate from an estate and house located in Deventer in that Lange bischopstrate between on the one hand the estate and house of Jauffer ther Loe and on the other side the widow of Peters of Geseke, and who annually to receive from there on Easter. This according to the letter of the aldermen with seal of Henrichs van Marckell and Derrick Scharff sealed on 12/04/1561. [De Nederlandse Leeuw 1911, pag. 400. Liber Renunciacionum 1559-1569 p. 129 – C afk. van etc. dus 1572].

Johan died a few years after his marriage and had one son.

Elburg, 04/01/1560: Dispute between Andries Gerritsoon complainant and Jan Hermsoon van Ruremunde defendant. After hearing everyone and having considered a few things, the mayor Lambert Franckensoon has determined that the transaction of the half yard should still go ahead after the payment has been made. [“Liber Sententiarum 1551 - 1587”, negentiende uitgave in de serie nadere toegangen van het streekarchivariaat te Elburg. Hierbij gaat het om een transcriptie with index van een deel van het oudrechterlijk archief van de stad Elburg].

Elburg, 12/06/1585: Teunis Jacobs van Romunde had an infant daughter with his late wife Aaltje van Eibergen. He payed her 150 daalders, that are invested in a piece of land in Eibergen, which is given to his daughter. Then later Teunis appeared before the aldermen saying he intends to marry foregoing Janneke Herberts in community of property, with condition that in case Teunis dies before the married couple have produced a child, Janneke will receive 150 daalders and 30 nickels from her father inheritance. If the aforementioned couple don't get children Janneke will still receive the 150 150 and the half of the goods the couple owns at that moment. If Janneke would die without having offspring with Teunis her heritage will go to her mothers family. [Samenvattingen protocollen van vrijwillige rechtspraak, Elburg inv nr 118, 1581-1590].

2. Janneke Herberts

Henrick never married and remained childless.

Voorthuizen, 1535: Dirk van Roermond left together with the waiter van Putten, Arnold van Venlo, to Paderborn to become abbot of the monastery. He was hailed as a good orator, a learned and sincere man. On 14/08/1541 he died presumably of poisoning. Since he was not yet 50 years old at the time, he must have been born around 1491. [Pastoor Hoozeboom, Rondon de twee torens].

Christina who was married to Coenraad Wegerus had a son and a daughter. Jenneken married Johan Veltkamp and had 1 daughter. Son Gerrit van Romunde married twice married produced a family with mint masters and administrators. He lived in the Lange Bisschopsstraat in Deventer.

Deventer, 1561: At his marriage, Gerriet van Remunde bought the house in the Langerbisschopsstraaten from his brothers and sisters. [Huwelijksregister mariakerk te Deventer].

Deventer, 02/10/1586: Aernth Loe verkoopt o.m. een huis aan Wynolth Loe x Maria, gelegen in de Bisschopstraat tusschen erven en huizen van zal. Willem Limberch en Gerrit van Remunde Zaliger. [De Nederlandse Leeuw 1911, jaargang 29 p401].

Mint Masters ⁽¹⁵⁹⁰⁻¹⁷³⁸⁾ 8

The coinage right is the right to operate a coin installation or to mint coins or have them minted as a legal currency. Governments (cities or provinces) usually appointed the so-called Mint Masters. These were then given the right to mint coins for an (un)specified period. A strict selection preceded such a tenure and most of the Mint Masters came from wealthy families. The office usually remained several Generations in the same family, so that certain generations were associated with the Mint Masters at that time. In addition to names such as Wijtgens, Van Sonsbeeck, Stalpert van der Wiele, Van Vierssen, Van Romunde was a well-known name.

The records of the Mint Mastership in the Van Romunde family starts in Bremen, Germany, about two centuries before the line of the Mint Masters started in Deventer. In 1387 Hinrick van Romunde was already mint master there [Beernink, 1982] However, there is no proof that he is related to the Dutch mint masters. Merten van Ruermunde, who was married to Elizabeth Mercator, was (among other things) silversmith and already engraved coins in Venlo around 1420. Later he became ennobled.

Bremen, 30/03/1387: Hinrick van Romunde (Heinrich von Romunde also called Hinrich of Hinrik genoemd) is appointed by the City of Bremen for three years as mint master. [Bremische Münzen, H. Jungk, 1875].

Derric van Remund in 28/04/1435 was described by the hospitals and guilds of Arnhem as the cutter("dye snyer") of golden guilders. In the city of Utrecht in 27/03/1551 H. van Remundt is mentioned as the fifth waardijn. Gerrit van Remunde is mentioned in about 1558. He would be paid 50 gold guilders per year from the "sleischat" for his service as a currency master [Source: G.A. Deventer, Van de Munt inv.nr 890 f. 10].

The Van Romunde family produced at least 16 Mint Masters in the 17th and first half of the 18th century. All are descendens in a straight line from Johan van Romunde and his wife Lyze. Moreover, two women from this family are married with a Mint Master from another family. The master's mark of the mints was often the rosette (rose). The baptismal registers of the Mariakerk in Deventer only begin in 1571. Immediately afterwards the following entries can be found:

Deventer, 27/05/1572: Baptised Hermannus son of. Gerriet van Remunde <Romunde> and Aeltgen. (Witness Willem Berentsen, Anna Baltasar Wyntgens wife) [Doopregister mariakerk te Deventer tgs.nr. 0723, inv. Nr 105].

Deventer, 06/12/1574: Baptised. Jan son of Gerriet van Remunde and Aeltgen. (Witness Bartolemaeus Lantink his wife, Albert Stevensen. [Doopregister mariakerk te Deventer].

According to the Overyssele almenak 1855 of Cost Jordens, Gerrit v. R. was married to Aeltgen Wyntgens, dr. of mint master Balthazar W. and Anna Fleming. Later Gerrit married Aeltgen Arensdaughter of Heetuysen [Marriage register Maria church in Deventer]. Together they had a son Arent who later married Maria Buissonet.

Gerrit had a third son with his second wife, namely Arent. Algonde wrote a letter in the 17th century [M. G. Wildeman (1906), "Twee brieven uit de 17de eeuw". De Wapenheraut, p. 255]. In it she indicated that her parents (Arent van Romunde and Maria Buyssenet) were married in Zwolle in October 1596. For the children of Arent and Maria Buyssenet Andriesdr. See Mr. J. van Doorninck, [Geschiedkundige aantekeningen]. (Their marriage is incorrectly dated here). In 1628, Arent van Romondt nominated his half-brother Johan as his replacement/successor. His request was granted by the city and when Arent died in 1629, Johan took over his office.

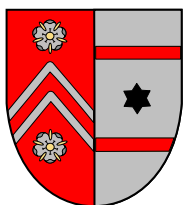

Johan (Jan) was married to Wynne Wijntgens and worked in various places in East Friesland. He secured the office of Mintmaster for one of his sons in case he died. In 1635 the city agreed to his request to transfer the office to his son after his death. In 1646 his son Arent succeeded him, possibly because his request to be allowed to mint small change was not met. Silver had become so expensive that the mint was at a standstill for some time. As a result, the income of the mintmaster and his workers came to a standstill. In 1671 he died and his son Gerrit succeeded him as mintmaster in February. When the republic was attacked in 1672 by England, France and the bishoprics of Cologne and Munster, Utrecht, Gelderland and Overijssel were occupied and Gerrit fled to Amsterdam. This city needed a lot of money to pay for the war against the attackers and therefore levied extra taxes on the rich.

Commander Reinier van Raesfeld, husband of Elisabeth van Roermond (daughter of Arent and Maria Buissonet), acts as guardian on behalf of daughter Agins. [De Nederlandse Leeuw 1911, jaargang 29 p401].

Jan van Romunde and Margaretha Vos have five children, including three sons who all become mint masters. Their first son Gerrit marries twice. His first wife is Catharina van Strijp and his second wife is Ebben Fewen. Ebben is buried with her daughter in the Grote Kerk in Emden. The gravestone contains a coat of arms that is described as follows: Divided: 1. two narrowed chevron accompanied in the chief and foot by a rose, 2. two narrowed crossbars, between which a six-pointed star. Based on this description, the family coat of arms shown here has been reproduced. The colours may differ from the real coat of arms.

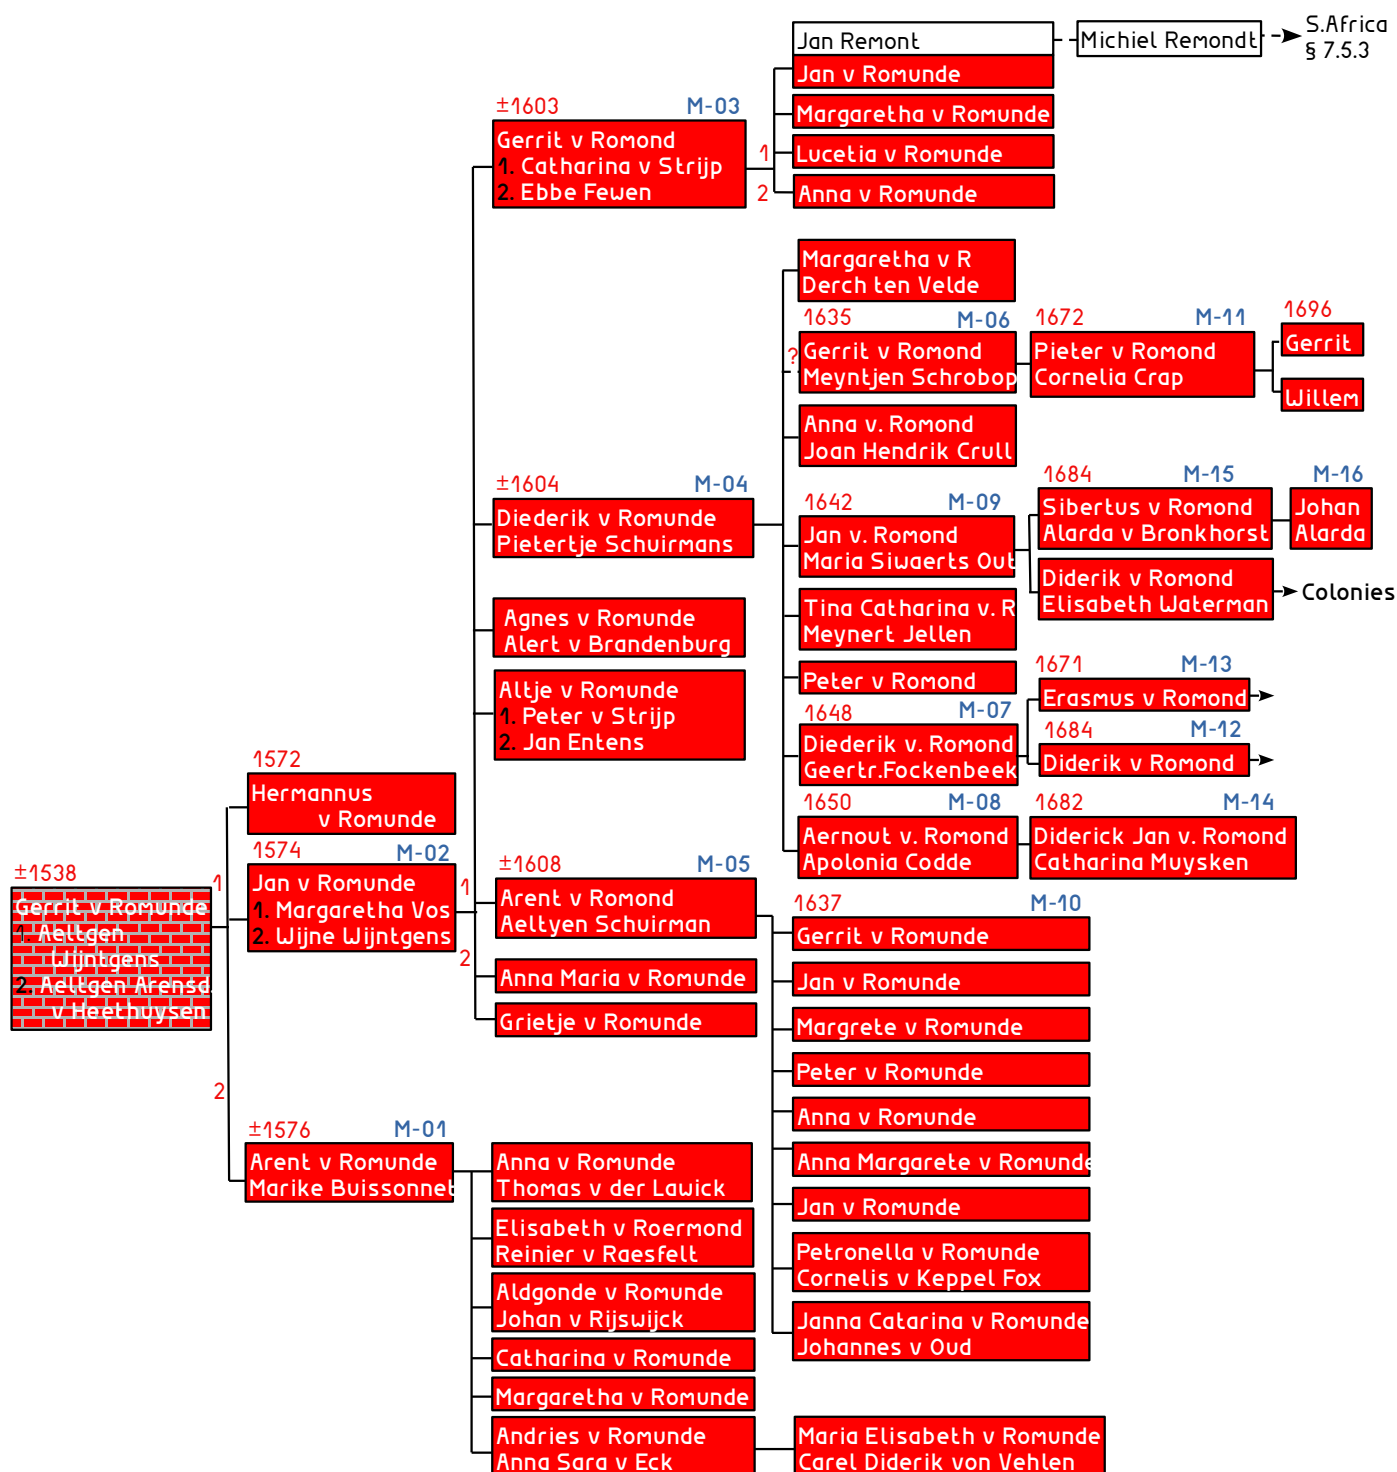

Arent van Romunde was the second son of Gerrit whom he fathered with his second wife Aeltgen van Heethuysen. Arent married Marike Buissonet.

From the Register of Life Annuity of Zwollen of 1653 it appears that the mother of Anna Margriet and Petronella is Aleid Schuirmans. She was therefore the wife of Arend van Romunde. On 20-09-1653 the surviving children of the late Derk van Ruimondt (Mint Master in Enkhuizen) and Petertje Schuirmans are listed for: Margriet (19), Anna (12), Jan (11), Peter (6), Wijna Catharina (9), Diderik (5) and Arend van Ruimond (3). Subsequently, Agnes van Ruimond, daughter of the late Jan van Ruimondt (Mint Master Zwollen) and Wijne Wijntgens, takes annuities on children of the above-mentioned Derk (= Diderik) and Arend. This seems to indicate that Derik was her brother, but she probably acts on behalf of the children of her already deceased (half)brother Gerrit. According to the Dutch Patriciaat (1912), Gerrit's mother is said to be Margaretha Vos and not Wijne Wijntgens as indicated in the figure above.

It is not entirely certain that Gerrit (who later married Meyntjen Schrobop) is the son of Diederik van Romunde and Pietertje Schuirmans. He is not mentioned in the register of annuities in 1654. However, this is the most plausible option. When his sister Margrieta van Romondt and Dijdrich ten Velde baptize their daughter Johanna in September 1702 in Hoorn, his wife Meijntjen Schrobob is a witness (in addition to his sister Anna) [DTB Enkhuizen 7. Gereformeerde doopinregistratieen 1671-1696, Hoorn archief inv.nr 7 folio 13]. Their father and mother died in 1652 and 1651 respectively in the nearby city of Enkhuizen. Before that, they lived in Emden for a long time. His father Diederik was (among other things) mint master there. The only other option is that half-brother Jan had a child named Gerrit. But little is known about him.

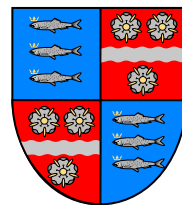

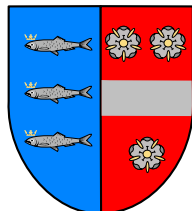

Due to the high price of silver, the first guilders based on the new guidelines were not minted in Enkhuizen (West Friesland) until 1699. In 1703, there was the first mention of a significant minting of guilders. In 1704, after Pieter was dismissed, he was succeeded by his cousin Diederik Jan van Romondt. From then on, the guilders would be provided with two brackets set with pearls.

Due to the high price of silver, the guilders minted in 1699 in Enkhuizen (West Friesland) are the first that met the new guidelines. In 1703 there was for the first time a significant coinage of guilders. Pieter was succeeded in 1704 by his nephew Diederik Jan van Romondt after he was dismissed. The guilders from now have two brackets trimmed with pearls. Johan van Romond (1642-1710) succeeded Hendrik Eijk in 1734 as Mint Master and paid 6,000 guilders for this privilege. He borrowed eight thousand guilders from the sisters Aletta and Maria van Mansvelt and four thousand guilders from Beatrix Maria van Bueren to start as a Mint Master. At the time of the Mint Mastership, he lived in the official residence on the Oudegracht. His son Adriaan married in Utrecht on 07/04/1769 Maria Buck, daughter of the Mint Master Otto Buck from Dordrecht. In 1738, essayeur Arnold Eliot accused him of making coins of too little weight and of poor quality. Following this accusation, Van Romond hastily filed his resignation, which was honored to him. He got away well because in 15/06/1587 Anthony Reinierszen van Eembrugge, Mint Master of Enkuizen was executed for this offense. After Johan the Mint Mastership seems to end in this gender. A detail of the drawing of his grave shows his family coat of arms, which comes from his great-great-grandfather.

His great-grandchild Willem Jan Adriaan (son of Otto and Helena van Dielen) married Anna Carolina Georgette Magna van Hangest d'Yvoy on 23-08-1820. Anna is a daughter of Cornelis Frederik d'Yvoy and Susanna Cornelia Frederika d'Aumale. Their son Jonkheer Meester Otto receives permission by Royal Decree of 28-05-1837 to place the name d'Aumale before his own. The family crest is then adjusted, but falls into disuse because he remained unmarried.

His sister was Lady Susanna Cornelia Frederika van Romondt (1825-1899). She was the last noble scion with descendants from this lineage. She married in 1854 with master Willem Phoenix Vis (1818-1879). They had one son, master Cornelis Constant Willem van Romondt Vis (1855-1922) who by Royal Decree of 31/12/1894 change his family name to Van Romondt Vis and thus became the ancestor of the patrician family Van Romondt Vis. There are currently two weapons from this genus which are shown below.

Governors in the (former) Dutch colonies

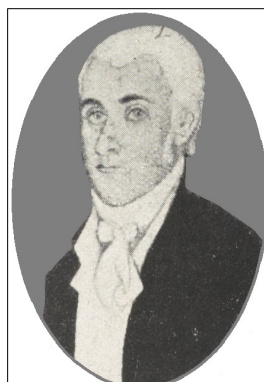

Johan van Remunde is (presumably) the first namesake who was active overseas. He was secretary of the colony of New Netherland in America. He came into conflict with Peter Minuit (1580-1638), the director general of the colony and founder of New Amsterdam (= New York). Johan accused Minuit of hypocrisy, cruelty and dishonesty. The minister also expressed himself very negatively about Minuit's behavior in his letters to his friends in the Netherlands. Both Minuit and Remunde were recalled to Holland by the Dutch West India Company (WIC) in 1632 for further investigation. After an extended investigation, Minuit was dismissed. Johan van Remunde then returned to the colony. He died before 22-11-1635. This is evident from a petition from his widow requesting payment of her husband's outstanding wages to her. Johan's parents are unknown.

Michiel Romund signed on the Batavia around 1675 (about 17 years old) and settled in Cape Town a few years later (see § 7.5.5).

On 10-06-1752 Jan van Romunde entered the service of the Dutch East India Company and sailed on the ship Gouverneur-generaal in 130 days as a cabin boy to the Cape. On 09-11-1752 the ship sailed on to Batavia and arrived there on 17-01-1753. He did not return to the ship Vosmaar until 31-10-1758 and arrived back in the Netherlands on 24-06-1759.

Other namesakes were more focused on the Netherlands Antilles. These islands were discovered at the end of the 15th century by Alonso de Ojeda and conquered from the Spanish by the Dutch West India Company in 1634. Over time, the islands have been in the hands of other European powers several times and have known different forms of government. After the bankruptcy of the Dutch West India Company in 1791, Curaçao became a real Dutch colony. The Netherlands Antilles comprise five island territories: Bonaire, Curaçao, Saba, Sint Eustatius and the southern part of Sint Maarten.

With the birth of Diederik Johannes van Romondt, son of Johan Sibertus van Romondt and Lumina te Herckel on 16 February 1781 in Amsterdam, a new West Indian branch of the Van Romondt family was born. For about 150 years, a dynasty emerged that succeeded in obtaining almost complete economic and political control of the island of Sint Maarten. They also exerted their influence on other islands, albeit to a lesser extent. For the historical impression, I have taken most of the information from: "For the Love of St. Maarten" by Will Johnson. In 1801, Diederik arrived in Sint Maarten (St. Martin). Three years later, he married Ann Hassell, who was born in

Diederik Johannes
v Romondt

Ann Hassell

Sint Maarten. In 1805, he had his first child. Seven more would follow. From 1820 to 1840, he was governor of Sint Maarten. This was a turbulent time. Because of the presence of the French and English colonies, the developments in the slave community on Sint Maarten after 1838 were very different from those on the Leeward Islands. In 1838, the British slaves were declared free. More than a hundred slaves fled to the British colonies of Anguilla and St. Kitts. Fearing even more economic loss, the owners asked the Dutch King Willem 2 in 1844 for the immediate emancipation of their slaves and compensation per slave. Fearing unrest among the slaves in other Dutch colonies, this was not agreed to. After the French slaves were also emancipated in 1848, the Dutch slaves on Sint Maarten revolted. They stopped their work and some fled to the French part. The largest slave owners asked Governor Diederik van Romondt to submit a proposal to the Colonial Council to allow their slaves to be treated as free workers from then on. The Council agreed. Because Diederik was not a descendant of a plantation owner, he had a more objective view of the slaves. After their release, he devoted himself to educating the slaves better. He also taught the slaves the teachings of the Bible and motivated the local aristocracy to join the Methodist church, which had previously been seen exclusively as a church for slaves.

His eldest son Johannes Willem succeeded him as lieutenant governor on Sint Maarten until his death in 1849. Several of Diederik's descendants held positions of power within the Dutch colonies in the following decades.

The overview above does not represent the total base of power. Several female descendants of the family married lieutenants from other families. Moreover, they had a lot of property. The Van Romondt family slowly succeeded in taking possession of almost all the better lands on the Dutch and French part of the island of Sint Maarten. At one point, they own almost all of the major estates on the island. They also owned many large schooners <certain types of ships> whose captains and crew were often recruited from Saba. Examples of plantations owned or owned by family members: Belvedere, Madam's, Bethlehem, The Hope, Reward, The Vineyard, Bellevue, Mary's Fancy, Tintamarre Island, Definance, Experiment, Nazareth, Saint John's Ranch, Betty's, Saint Peter's Prospect, Diamond, Windsor and some of the other estates as well as most of the two story houses of the former Philipsburg.

Diederik Christian Ian Ramondt succeeds his father Diederik Charles van Ramondt as elected counselor on 19/07/1904. Diederik lived for a while on his island Tintamarre, which officially belonged to the French part of St. Maarten. That was useful for avoiding taxes. At that time about twenty people lived on the island. After the storms in 1956 and 1960, the island was deserted. Diederik did not get married but had many "white" girlfriends during his life. The last was "Miss Josie" from St. Kitts with he lived together until his death in 1948. With his death the Van Romondt disappeared from the island of St. Maarten. Many of the assets changed hands. Most of the female descendants married foreigners and moved to other countries and the property on Sint Maarten was sold.

he Van Romondts also played a role in the colonial past of Suriname. A silent witness to this is the Van Romondt building, which is now in a state of collapse. In 1889 E.A. van Romondt managed the Mon Tresor coffee plantation on the Commewijne River. After 1910 William Herann Anthon van Romondt was a former district commissioner Referendary of the Colonial Office.

7.5.5 ~ SOUTH AFRICA: Michiel Romondt (± 1658)

More than a century before Diederik Johannes van Romondt (the ancestor of the family of namesakes in the Netherlands Antilles) saw the light of day, Michiel Romondt (alias Romond, Maggiel Romont or Michiel Rodement) was born around 1658 in Zutphen. If the date of birth is correct, Michiel would have signed on as a labourer on a ship to Indonesia around the age of 17. According to his own testimony, he deserted in the port city of Bantam and signed on the English ship the Unicorn (the unicorn) that sailed to South Africa. Once arrived in Cape Town (Capetown) he deserted again. He then went to Mauritius where he arrived in 1676. A year later he returned to Cape Town. According to commander Deodati governor of Dutch Mauritius, however, this testimony is incorrect and Michiel would have returned to Cape Town on his orders. [Leibbrandt, H.C.V. (1896)]. There he married Cornelia van den Bogaert (Cornelia Bogaerts) from the Netherlands. In the (shortened?) transcription of the marriage certificate his parents are not mentioned). His first son is called Gerrit and was possibly named after his father. However, it is not certain that Michiel was Gerrit's biological father in which the second child of Cornelia might be named after is her grandfather (Jan of Johan). In that century, the only mention of a male name bearer in Zutphen is that of Jan. This Jan could be the son of Gerrit van Romund and Catharina van Strijpt who lived in Emden and was born there about 1633.

Zutphen, 05-04-1672: Orphanage registration of Jan Remont, foreman. [Archief Zutphen, Protocol Weeskamer, boek VI, arch.nr. 137 inv.nr. 6, p 190].

In 1707 was Michiel Rodement eigenaar van de boerderij Zandvliet aan de Eerste River te Stellenbosch, welke hij had verkregen van dominee Petrus Kalden. Ook heeft hij land gekregen onder de voorwaarden dat hij de nederzetting zou voorzien van vers voedsle zoals zoete aardappelen, groenten en tarwe. Zijn nakomelingen zijn tot circa 1800 bekend. Vermoedelijk leven er thans nog nakomelingen in Kaapstad.

Gerrit (05/09/1683) was baptized only as s/f by Cornelia Bogaert and Michiel Romont was probably not his father, although he said he was and took his last name. 11/07/1683 Michiel Romont married Cornelia Bogaert; Michiel, living on Mauritius, was in the Cape at the time of his marriage to act as a spokesman for the citizens. He returned to Mauritius in 1684. [See Dan Sleight's 'Buitepost' p.649/650., Baptism Register, Palm kronieke Baptisms, Lorna]. Although born of an unknown biological father, he was legitimised just a few months prior to his baptism when his mother wed (11-07-1683) his adoptive father Michael Romond (from Zutphen) then visiting the Cape from Mauritius to convey grievances of his fellow free-citizens on the island to Cape Commander.

8 Genera v. Remunde, Romunde

In 1396 the couple Johannus and Merts is mentioned in Cologne. These could have been the parents of Jacob in the paragraph below. But all this is only a research hypothesis. Another possibility is that Johannez, the merchant mentioned in the miracle book of 's-Hertogenbosch, is the father of Jacob. Johannes and Johannez could also be the same person.

8.1 Main lineage Jacob^(± 1345)

Johan van Remunde (nicknamed 'the rich one') who initially lived in Deventer had a father called Jacob. Jacob is only mentioned once as the father of Johan and does not appear in the Deventer archives. It is therefore possible that he never lived in Deventer. There are two indications that he lived in Cologne and that it concerns Jacob van Ruremunde who was married to Guetgyn. The first indication is the fact that the trade of son Johan ('the rich one') is mainly focused on Cologne. The second indication is that Johan calls his daughter Geertruid. That could be a reference to his mother Guetgyn.

Cologne , 14/08/1407: Jacob van Ruremunde (alias Von Roermonde) and his wife Guetgyn, declare that they will get the rent of a house on the corner of the Fobbengassen for a reduced amount of 7 Mark (previously 10 Mark). 2 Mark is paid to Nese van Mohlenheim, abbess of the Mariengarten monastery, 2 to Bela von Kusun, prioress of the monastery of St. Gertruden and 3 to Gerhard van Eisel, citizen of Cologne. The provision is made that the house will be renovated for 50 marks in the coming years. Cop Pap adding that in 1423 the couple transferred their rightful share of the house to S. Agneten. Before 1476, his son Johannes had a conflict with the very wealthy and influential Duke of Burgundy. (This Duke was an enemy of his liege lord Adolf 3). He was then still a citizen of Deventer, but it seems that he was staying in Zutphen, just like his sister. In 1481, he was captured in the city of Cologne. The Adolf 3 Count of Nassau-Wiesbaden tried in vain to have him released. (Adolf was appointed imperial stadtholder of the county of Zutphen by Emperor Frederick 3 in 1481 and was stadtholder of the duchy of Gelre and the county of Zutphen between 1489 and 1492). It was not until 1486, through the intervention of Emperor Friedrich 3 (and King Maximilian), that this succeeded. The emperor then visited the city for his coronation celebration. But apparently the long imprisonment did not do Johan any good.

because in 1489 he appears to have been admitted to the hospital of S. Ursula in Fessel, where he is chained because of insanity. In 1491 he dies. His fortune goes to his wife and his brother. Presumably he had no children.

Cologne, 19/05/1486: During their long stay in Cologne, Emperor [Friedrich 3] and King Maximilian stood up for many murderers and those who had been expelled from the city and finally announced a mandate for the council, under serious threat of punishment. Furthermore, many demands were submitted to the Emperor and King for the abolition of the municipal Rhine toll and numerous monasteries and Beguine convents tried to increase their privileges and the number of houses. Finally, the Electors and Princes of Frankfurt and Cologne had granted the city a large contribution for the campaign against the King of Hungary, the first installment of which amounted to 6,240 Rhenish guilders until Erasmus Day [3. June] are due. After the council had received a letter from the pope to the emperor about the wine bar of the clergy and had often discussed these matters with the friends and the intelligentsia of all the councils and the forty-four, they finally thought it best to only commission the mayor H. Peter von Ercklentz, who had long tirelessly negotiated these matters in secret with the emperor, the king and other princes and lords in Frankfurt, Aachen and Cologne, because it is more difficult to have secret conversations with several people. He has received authority and command,

- To pay the 6,420 guilders in full or on several dates, in order to realize other advantages for the city and especially the confirmation of all old privileges by the king.
- If possible, to come to an agreement with the emperor that a certain part of the customs will eventually be ceded to the empire and to give the emperor 1,500 guilders annually for life. To issue a new document about this and to have all expenses and gifts made for this purpose as he deems appropriate for the benefit of the city.
- To come to an amicable settlement with Count Adolf of Nassau about his alleged claims and those of his servants Johan van Schijffwylre and Nicasius Hageney, as well as about Johan van Remunde, whom he demands as his own man of the city, and if successful, to give him a gift of 400 Oberland guilders.

With much effort and many requests and gifts, H. Peter of Ercklentz finally succeeded in persuading the emperor and the king to spare the city from the murderers and exiles and their demands and to remain in possession of its privileges, and finally from the king for 240 guilders. The amount reduced after the attack confirmed all the old privileges, freedoms and old customs. [Best. 10 Ratsprotokolle - Rpr. - 1396-1798, A 3M - Ratsmemorial - 1473– 1500, p. 184-185].

Cologne, 19/05/1486: The city council of Cologne decides to send delegates to Emperor Frederick 3 and Roman King Maximilian to deal with, among other things, the claims of Adolf Count of Johan van Steenberg is related to the Dukes of Gelre. (His father Peter van Steenberg was probably a bastard son of Count Reinoud I). Geertruid is probably named after her mother Gertriertruyde. 9.1 Historical context in Venlo

As far as known, the Celts are the oldest inhabitants of the region around Venlo. They already lived there at 800 BC and were almost completely exterminated by the Romans, after which their habitat was occupied (at the invitation of the Romans) by Germanic people from the region. During the Great Migration (in the third century AD) the Maasdal and also Venlo were largely depopulated. In the 8th century, in the episcopal archives of Cologne, Venlo is again mentioned as a center of trade on the Meuse. By the end of the 13th century, Venlo already had many urban features such as staple and toll charges. The obtaining of city rights did not take place until 1343. Among other things the residents were allowed to build a city wall from this time on.

In the Middle Ages, Venlo was one of the most important depots on the Maas. The city belonged to the Gelderse Overkwartier and was a member of the Hanseatic League since 1481. The city had a safe natural harbor and due to a difference in depth of the Maas, frequent transshipment was required. There was direct trade via the Maas with mainly Liège, Maastricht, Roermond and Nijmegen. But a lot of trade was also conducted with the County of Holland (especially Dordrecht). There was also intensive trade with the German hinterland, including the city of Cologne, via various country roads. With the fall of Venlo in 1543 (Treatise of Venlo), the last region of the Duchy of Guelders passed into the hands of Emperor Charles V.

9.2 Progenitor Johan van Ruremunde (±1375)

The oldest alderman's seal from Venlo dates from 1269. In Venlo before 1679 it was customary to assign the mayoralty to two people. The mayoralty was not an inheritable title. Until 1796, the mayors were elected annually by the aldermen. An alderman was a village or city administrator who is somewhat comparable to our current aldermen. The court of aldermen formed the local government, including the local judiciary. For over 100 years (see table) this Van Ruremunde family managed to obtain the function of shared mayoralty (B). Other administrative functions, such as those of aldermen and bailiffs (S), were also regularly fulfilled by this family.

9.2.1 Descendants in Venlo

Generation 1

The first mention of a name bearer in this city concerns Johan van Ruremunde. He is mentioned in 1413 and 1414 (together with Heinrick Ratinck) as mayor [Stadsrekeningen Venlo 1349 – 1796]. Assuming that you have to be at least 40 years old to obtain this position, he must have been born before 1375. Presumably he had two children Merten(1) and Elisabeth (1).

Generation 2

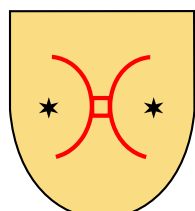

Elisabeth (1) van Ruremunde married Johan van Holthuysen, son of Johan van Holthuysen and Isabella van Kriekenbeck. (Reyner van Holthuysen and Gebel van Stalberen were the presumed parents of this Johan). The families that provided mayors in Venlo were often related through marriage. In 1437, for example, Reyner van Holthuysen was mayor. He will be a relative (cousin?) of the Johan that Elisabeth married.

Venlo 14/05/1430: Johan van Holthuysen marries with Elisabeth van Ruremunde. On 14 May 1430. On behalf of his mother Isabelle and together with his cousin Reinier van Brempt in mortgage with the house Kriekenbeck. In 1443, he lent the Maria Weide monastery in Venlo with tithes in Beesel. In 1450 Johan and Elyzabeth declared that they had transferred a rent on land under Lottum to their cousin Willem van Holthuysen. [genwiki.nl].

Merten (1) van Ruermunde was married to Elizabeth Mercator. Her father was Lambert Mercator (the Elder) and her mother (possibly) Mechtildis van Ruremunde [source?] Merten was alderman in Venlo between 1435 and 25-04-1455. From 1440 to 1461 Merten acts as steward of Venlo and Kriekenbeek; a position that his presumed nephew will also hold later. He is also said to have been a judge or scholtis in Velden and Grubbenvorst. When Merten dies, Elizabeth (daughter of Lambert) is mentioned as Elizabeth van Ruremunde, which can lead to confusion with the previously mentioned Elisabeth who was married to Johan van Holthuysen.

Merten had a family crest that strongly resembles that of several other mayors of Venlo from that time. For example, that of Bertholt Mertens and Reyner Holthuysen, who all have a mill iron as the basis of their coat of arms. The coat of arms of Merten concerns a mill iron with a five-pointed star between the upper arms. [Maasgouw 1880 no. 102 p. 397, www.loegiesen.nl]. The inscription of the seal is: "S. Merten van Roermunde". Merten died in January 1516.

A mill iron (= Rhine or moline) is fixed in the upper millstone and keeps it in place. Besides as a regional symbol in the Meijerij and Peelland, the mill iron indicates the free milling right or the staple right of grain or other raw materials to be milled. Those who traditionally carried this sign were not so much millers but owners of the milling right. There are a few name bearers who practiced the trade of miller. In 1352, a certain Johannes de Ruremunde lived in Maastricht who was a miller. And also between 1585 and 1622, the miller Johann von Ruremond lived in Hersel (Germany). However, there are no indications that they carried a coat of arms and also not that they were related to the Venlo regent family. However, the mill iron is also an old legal symbol and that meaning was probably also carried by Merten van Ruermunde. There are plenty of explanations for the five-pointed star. For example, it refers to the veneration of Mary, but also to the city of Maastricht.

Presumably Merten (1) and Lysbeth Mercator had three children. The oldest would have been Johan who was named after Merten's father. The other three were Elisabeth (2) and (Mat)Thys (2).

(Mat)Thys (2) van Ruremunde

Thys van Ruremunde married Catharina Puteanus. Catharina was previously married to Jan Ingenhuys (wine merchant, alderman and mayor). Thys was born around 1445 and died about 1515. Catharina was born in 1446 and is the daughter of Joannes Puteanus and Agnes. The coat of arms of the Puteanus family contains three black roses. Generation 4

The deed of 1545 describes in six pages the process of the succession of the inheritance of Thys (2) v Ruremunde. The document is difficult to read and the transcription is far from incomplete. The document probably describes the following dispute. Thys married Catharina Puteanus with prenuptial agreements. He has five children with her, all of whom are mentioned in the document. The dispute probably concerns Elisabeth (3) continuing to live in the house with her mother when her father Thys (2) dies. This remains the case when her mother dies. When she herself dies, her brother Marten (3) takes over the house as his inheritance. Marten and Rijcka van Lewen (Leeuwen) cannot agree with this because they thought that the house belonged to their mother.

Elisabeth (3) married Godfried van Leuven. She died in Venlo on 25-06-1558.

Mechtildis Ruremonde married Martinus Douveren (Martinus van Doveren) around 1510. They had a child Elisabeth van Doveren who married Johan van Ruweel named Ingenhuys on 29-01-1544.

Johannes

Johan was predestined to become a priest, but that seems to have turned out differently. In 1508 a Jo(h)annus de Ruremunda de Venlo studied at the University of Cologne. "Leodad" is also mentioned. This probably refers to the fact that he studied earlier in Liège. Jan was alderman of Venlo in 1533 and 1536 to 1538. In 1537 and 1543 Jan was ruling mayor of Venlo. In that role he surrendered the city of Venlo to Emperor Charles V after which he signed the Treaty of Venlo, whereby 7 Dutch Provinces were brought under one crown. Later he was sworn bailiff (judge) in Roermond and mayor in 1567 and 1573. From 1548, he took the oath and was appointed by the Court of Gelderland. It is not clear whether he was married, but Göbel was possibly his child. (Göbel may have been named after her aunt Guble (see below).

Gebell von Roermond

Gubell will have been born around 1495. She was married Lambert Spiegel. According to an unverifiable source she died on 20-7-1579 in Erkelenz. Lambert is mentioned several more times in deeds concerning Catharina van Meholt and Wachtendonk and her son Gerlich. (See later at generation 5).

Martinus van Ruremunde (3) married Catharina van Meholt and Wachtendonk. He was steward of Venlo in 1527. On 10-11-1529 he was elected to the council. and in 1528 and 1535 peyburgemeester. Generation 5

In 1551 Catharina is the widow of Marten (3). In a dispute her son Gerlich is mentioned by name, but the other children are not. They are probably still minors. It concerns Catharina, Thins and Otte. The latter married Georg Creckelmans on 26-05-1570 in Beesel.

Venlo, < 26-05-1570: Gehuwd: Jurgen Creckelmans. Kriecckelman, rentmeester van het ambt Brügggen 1561-1589, leenman van Nunhemshof te Vlodrop, pandheer van de Munt te Tegelen, eigenaar van 1/5 deel van de visserij te Venlo en Otte van Romundt. [Loegiesen.nl, P. Geuskens: De Rentelaershof te Vlodrop. In: Roerstreek '96 p. 63-89].

Venlo, 1572: Trynn van Ruremunde (Trijn) lived as a homeowner (current number 5) on the Vleesstraat. [Real estate tax register].

Venlo, 1533: Johan van Ruremunde lived next to his sister Trijn in the Vleesstraat (according to the schatcedule), is then mentioned as (clergy) lord. [Real estate tax register].

Dirk Engelen also lived around the same time. This person was born in Wessem and died in Maeseyck 03-08-1579. Dirk Engelen was a Maas skipper by profession and married Mercken (Maria) Thonissen around 1565. He became a citizen of Roermond. Among the skippers of the upper Maas he was later known as Dirck van Ruremunde, but it probably concerns a different person than the Dirck who lived in Lomstraat in Venlo. (He is maybe the same as Hendricus van Ruremund who was a witness in 1615). The skipper did choose Venlo as a storage place for the rapeseed, which he bought in Holland and from which he had oil pressed in Venlo. In another deed there is mention of a certain Johan van Cruchten Diericksoen van Ruremunde. It is probably meant here that this Johan is a son of Dierick and lives in Roermond.

Venlo, 10-01- 1565: In the presence of Johan van Greverade and Johan van Stalbergen the Younger, aldermen of Venlo, Johan van Cruchten Diericksoen of Ruremunde transfers a bond of 200 Rhine guilders, with the firm and old wine excise duty in Venlo as collateral, to Johan In gen Huys, as mayor of Venlo, for the benefit of that city.

Venlo, 1572: Dirck van Ruremonde lived as owner of a house in the Lomstraat in Venlo.

Gerlich van Ruremundt

The first two entries about Geerlag/Geerlacus from Nijmegen and Cuijk are confusing and seem to concern a different person than Gerlich son of Catharina van Meholt and Wachtendonck because the date of the deed is far before his estimated date of birth. However, both sons of Gerlich (Marten and Arnt) inherit from the procurator Van Bracht of the monastery of Sint Agatha on 01-03-1632. Moreover, the other names mentioned in the deed correspond with the names of the children of Catharina van Meholt. For the time being it seems that the date should be 1547 instead of 1507. The transcription of the deed suggests that Catharina, Johan and Otte are the children of Gerard Beyer. Catharina van Meholt may have remarried him. However, it is true that these children are mentioned in later deeds as Van Ruremunde.

Widow Catharina van Meholt and Wachtendonck and her son Gerlich get into a dispute with their lord Ott van Wijlich lord of Gribbenvorst about paying the lease on a piece of land that Gerlich uses in the footsteps of his father. Ott donates the land to them.

Hubert van Roemunde

Huibert van Roemunde is Grietgen's second husband. She was previously married to Herm Nacken. He lives in the Monstrate, as does Engelbert later. It is unclear who Hubert's parents were. 10 Genus v. Remunde

10.1 Historical context in Antwerpen

The area of Antwerp was already inhabited in the Stone Age. The favourable location on the Scheldt provided a connection to the hinterland, which undoubtedly contributed to the importance that the Romans placed in the area. A rampart was built in the ninth and tenth centuries. A trading district already developed within it at that time. In the 11th century, the area belonged to the official fiefs of the Dukes of Lower Lorraine, who had a stone castle, a rampart chapel and a stone wall built, allowing the area to evolve into an important centre of power. Antwerp was granted city rights in 1008. In the 15th century, the small settlements grew into a large port city with a lively trade with England and Central Europe. Around 1500, Antwerp had around 40,000 inhabitants and in 1560 already 100,000. During this period, the city was the economic capital of Europe.

In Germany, Johannes Gensfleisch zur Laden zum Gutenberg developed the process of printing from around 1440. In 1473, the first book was printed in the Netherlands and by 1480, printing presses were already in more than 100 European cities. Printed works would play an important role in the dissemination of new religious beliefs. In 1517, a work by Martin Luther against the trade in indulgences appeared in Germany. Because some of his students lived in the Augustinian monastery in Antwerp, this was one of the first places where his ideas were heard. The established order began to feel threatened. In 1522, the monastery was closed. The monks who refused to repent were burned. Charles V also feared the influence of the Reformation and in 1524 he imposed book censorship on printers, sellers and owners of various 'heretical' books. Violations were severely punished. Many illegal books were tracked down and destroyed. Several Antwerp printers moved their presses to the safe Emden and from there distributed the forbidden literature. In 1571 the first Dutch Reformed Church (NGK) was founded in this Frisian city.

10.1.1 Progenitors printer Christoffel v. Ruremunde (± 1485) x Lijnke

In the year in which the Augustinian monastery was closed because of Lutheran teachings, Hans van Remunde settled in the city as a printer, and two years later his brother <source ?> Hans and Christoffel van Ruremunde.

Hans (1) van Roermundt (John Ruremunde, Hanske Remunde, Johannes?)

In 1522 (a year after his university education in Cologne), Hans van Ruremunde established himself as a printer in Antwerp. He was also called Hans van Roermundt or Van Romundt. He was established 'on the Lombard fortress'. Just like fellow printer Van der Linde who also published Bibles. The signboard said: 't Huys van Wachtendonck'. Hans also mentions the location of the printing house in his Bible. The current street number is probably 54.

Cologne, 1521: Registration of Johannus Driveler de Ruremunda at the University of Cologne. <It is not certain that this is the same person. Christoph Wercken de Ruremunde also registers at that time>.

In 1523 Hans prints Dutch and English versions based on the Lutheran interpretation of the Old Testament. In the reprints he adds more and more reformed annotations. On 30-10-1526 he is sentenced by the Magistrate of Antwerp to a forced pilgrimage to Wilsnack (Wilsenaken) in Germany (then Prussia), because of printing "certain books, containing the teachings of the Lutheran heresies".

Antwerp, 08/05/1525: ... and corrected to the benefit of foreign Christians, which has been decayed in four principal parts, etc. For sale in Peter Kaetz's Delft house. Finally printed in Tanwerpen with great diligence, by Hans van Roemunde in the house of Wachtendonck on die Lombaerde [Bibel int duitsch and eerstelick overgheset: 4 vol. 12mo. d. veau. p. 150].

Antwerp, 30/10/1526: Hansken van Remunde, book printer, because he, contrary to and in contempt of the mandates and orders of Our Most Gracious Lord the Emperor, published and printed here in vain by order certain books, containing the doctrine of the Lutheran heresies, of which the Lord and the City are fully informed, will urge them, within sunshine, outside the city and freedom and, within the third day, outside the Margravateship of Antwerp, and make a pilgrimage to the Holy Blood, at Wilsenaken, and, after the letters are sent from there, he does not return and has something of the Lord and the city's mind, to lie on his prince. [Correctieboeck 1513-68, p. 30 and A.A.B. Deel 7, blz. 159].

On 29/03/1527 he returned from this penance journey to Antwerp. However, the journey did not result in Hans abandoning his Lutheran conviction. As early as the autumn of 1527, the second edition of Tyndale's 'New Testament' was smuggled into England on grain ships, specifically for the booksellers Francis Byrckman (Franz Brickmann, also bookseller in Cologne) and Peter Kaetz. In 1528, Hans was convicted under the name 'John Raymund' (a Dutchman) because he had printed 1500 Tyndale's new Testaments in Antwerp and transported 500 to England.

In 1529 he printed this New Testament again and ended up in Fleet Prison in London. In the 15th century, this prison was often used to lock up prisoners for civil cases. Prisoners had to pay for room and board, give tips to prison staff and pay a fee for entering and leaving the prison. Prison cells varied from luxurious private rooms to prisoners who slept two to a bed. The very poorest in prison were even known to beg through a grid while in prison. From 1531 onwards, the death penalty was introduced for heresy.

It is not clear what happened next. The most common hypothesis is that he died in prison. According to E.G. Duff, he suspects that he was released from prison and returned to Antwerp. He would later have returned to England to continue his trade as a bookseller under the name John Holibusche. He does not give any arguments, but the references below support this hypothesis. The son of his brother Christoffel also calls himself Holibusche and this could lead to confusion, but for the reference below from 1535 of the St. Lucas guild, that son would still be too young.

Antwerp, 1531: These following guilder brothers have been received from freemasters in the guild of Saint Luke 5: item 2 Jan van Remonde (=Remunde), book printer, and his lawful wife Magriete van Luxembourg, daughter of Reynier. [Ph. Rombouts and Th. Van Lerius, 1872, p 440, reference to the letter of aldermen of 16 March 1535 (1536, new style). (Ridder L. p. B.)]. <Is this the same person as Jan or does it concern the printer from Zwolle?>

Londen, 1535: Holibusche, alias Holybusche (John), of London, stationer, otherwise bokebynder, born in Ruremund, under the obedience of the Emperor. Letters of denization, 24 Feb., 1535. Bossuyts occurs again as Bartholomue van Bowsick in 1576, in the precinct of Christchurch, within the Duke's palace (II, 164). [E.J. Worman, 1906. Alien members of the book-trade...].

Jan van Remunde (Johannes Ruremundanus), te Zuolle, Antwerp en Keulen

In the 16th century there is another name bearer who is a printer. He is seen as a different person than Hans (1), but why is not clear. Perhaps because the first names Hans and Johan are not seen as synonyms. Johann von Remunde is mentioned on the printers' list of the University of Utrecht. Jan settles in Cologne from 1538. . He is married to Marguerite van Luxembourg, daughter of Reynier. From 1544 to 1553 Johan lives in Zwolle (Beernink, 1982). In 1546 he is married to Ffye <= Sophie, Ariaentsdr?> who was probably previously married to Bartholomeus Jacobsz. Dr. Ledeboer reports that he prints a Bible in Zwolle in 1546 under the name Jo. Remundanus. According to K. Dumber and I. Deventer, there would be a blood relationship between Johannes and (Ae)gidius Ruremundanus, who became rector of the Latin school in Deventer, in 1591 a juror was who lived on Norenbergerstraat in 1585 and died there in 1592. Gidius is a generation later than the printers.

In 1550, a certain Jan van Rumunde is mentioned as printer of the Psalterium Davidicum (book of psalms) in Antwerp. Presumably this concerns the same person. On 03-10-1562, Sophie is mentioned as the widow of Johan van Ruiremont.

F. Olthoff (1891) also believes that the Antwerp and Zwolle printers are probably the same person.

Christoffel van Remunde (± 1485) (Qiristopher van Ruremunde, Christophorus Endoviensis, Christophorus Ruremondanus) x Lijnke

According to the Mormon database, a certain Christophe van Remunde married Catharina in Eindhoven in 1506. This person died in 1531. Unfortunately, the source reference was missing and upon inquiry, the reference was removed from the database. It may concern the printer from Antwerp. After all, he was also married to a Catharina and also died in 1531. If the marriage year is correct, he should have been born around 1480. Christoffel settled in Antwerp from 1524 (two years after his brother Hans). In 1526, he was arrested in England because he sold the New Testament. A third of his fortune was confiscated. According to Verbraak (2007) he ended up in Westminster Abbey (Gatehouse) prison. Prisoners there were subjected to strict rules. Violations were punished brutally, from whippings and branding to amputation of limbs. Even minor violations resulted in beatings or starvation. It is not known whether Christoffel died there of natural causes. [Y. Foxe, Ecclesiasticall History, London 1576 and Anne Rouzet, Dictionnaire p. 193-194].

Keulen, 1521: Chrisoph Wercken de Ruremunda registers at the University of Cologne. <It is not certain that this is the same person. Johannus Driveler de Ruremunda also registers at that time>.

London, 1541: Rowe, John, servant to Herry Harman, the Birckmans' factor. I, 67. This is perhaps the French bookbinder who got into trouble for dispersing English New Testaments sold him by Christopher, a Dutchman of Antwerp, in 1531. [Foxe's Martyrs, 4th ed. by J. Pratt, Vol. I, p. 37].

Description of the book mark: In the middle is a pomegranate tree. In the crown of the tree sits Mary with crown and halo with her child on her lap. On the lower branch hangs a shield on a strap that is held by two lions. The shield is divided horizontally. In the upper part are three (French) lilies. Below that is the trademark. An inverted cross with Christ monogram and an also inverted 4 with extra bars (St. Andrew's Cross). Next to the cross, the letters 'C' and 'E'. On the strap the name of the printer Christophor Ruremunden. Meaning:

- The lilies could refer to the Wachtendonck family or (the guardians of) Roermond.
- Pomegranate tree: fertility symbol
- Lying cross: the cross is done away with, Christ has redeemed us from our original sin.
- St. Andrew's Cross: divine power that wards off evil.
- St. Peter's Cross: humility
- C E = Christophor Endovianum

The printing house was taken over from 1532 to 1546 by his wife Catharyn, (alias Catharine, Lynke or Lijnke van Remunde) and later from 1546 to 1553 by his son Hans van Ruremunde. [Rouzet p. 193-195]. She lived in the Berckensganck, located on the Lombaardevest, now number 70. Initially, Catharyn continued her husband's work and again printed New Testaments in English. When sales to England stagnated, she switched to printing government publications. She then changed her focus to journalism. In 1542, under the name Lijnke van Remunde, she published the very first printed newspaper 'Tijdinghe'. With this, she became the first journalist in the world. However, this activity was banned in 1546.

Some contemporaries are:

Antwerp, 15/06/1524: Proce van Frans van Remunde, pupil painter, who wounded Peeter Frans tried to kill him [Antwerpsch archiefblad uitg. On last van het gemeentebestuur, Vol. 1-2 111v/o].

Antwerp, 1536-1537: Mathijs van Remunde, Mertenszone is mentioned in the citizen's table of Antwerp.

Sons of Christoffel en Lynke: Hans (2) van Ruremunde (Melchior, Christean)

After Lynke had to stop her activities, Hans (2) van Ruremunde (Hansken van Remunde) started using the letter cutter median. He learned the craft at the Antwerp Guild of Saint Luke that was founded in 1382. The oldest members consisted of goldsmiths, glassmakers and woodcarvers. This was later expanded with engravers, letterers, printers and bookbinders. In the 16th century, there were 1925 registered masters with 48 professional groups.

Antwerp, 1530: Following are the apprentices who learned here from free masters? Hansken van Remunde (printer 2) taught by Jacob Orbach. Van Lerius*, 1872, p 116]

He worked under the pseudonym John Holybusche (Holiusche). Only a few signed prints from the years 1550-1553 are known of him. In 1553 he married Mechtilde van Luke and gave up the risky printing work. From that moment on he limited himself to the bookshop that was connected to the company. In a deed from 1556 his profession as bookseller is mentioned [Rouzet, p. 195]. In 1571 he lived in Tower, a district of London, and his son came to visit him. According to E.J. Worman, Hansken (4) van Remunde, who is mentioned in the Liggeren van het St. Lucasgilde, is a cousin of Hans (2). However, no evidence for this has been found. According to him, there would also be a mention of a Lambert Hollibusche in 1582, but he cannot be found in the original document.

In 1558, a certain Melchior Endovianus published a book with the following in the colophon: "typis Christophori Ruremundensis". This is an indication that Melchior is also a son of Christoffel.

10.1.2 Possible ancestors of the printers

The origins of both brothers are still unknown. There are several options conceivable where their origins lie:

- Roermond
- Zwolle of Kampen
- Venlo, Cologne of Eindhoven
- Deventer
- Zutphen of Doetinchem

Roermond

The 1535 entry by John Holibusche indicates that Hans was born in Roermond. What hypothetically follows from this is that Hans moved to Deventer at a young age to study at the famous Latin School. Latin was then the language of instruction at the universities. When he enrolled at the university in Cologne in 1521, 'Deventer' was added as a place of origin. He then settled in Antwerp as a printer. In this scenario, there is no blood relationship with the other main lines. If it is true that Jan van Ruremunde who married Marguerite van Luxembourg and Efyne is the same person as Hans, then Dr Ledeboer's claim that rector Aegidius Ruremundanus of the Latin school was related to him is also more likely.

Zwolle or Kampen

Jan van Ruremunde, who was married to Marguerite van Luxembourg and Efyne, is known to have lived in Zwolle and some researchers therefore think that his roots were there. However, there are not many arguments to support these thoughts. Jan was probably born before 1500. As far as is known, there were no name bearers in that city at that time. In 1393 Nicolaas Gherardi obtained citizenship there, but he only came from Roermond [Archief Overijssel, Reg. Oudste Stadsrecht ca. 1330, blz. 96]. He did not use the name as a surname. Hendrik, who was born around 1405 and married Styne, was probably the first name bearer in Zwolle. He was a canon. However, the notarial archive of Kampen suggests that he lived in Kampen in 1481. The next mention is of Arent van Romunde who settled in the city in 1590 as mint master and married Maria Buyssenet there in 1596. This is later than printer Jan who settled in the city in 1544. A century later, namesakes can be found. This is evident, for example, from the pupils of the Latin School and Gymnasium Celeum in Zwolle [Archief Overijssel 'Album Studiosae Iuventutis Scolae Swollanae', tgs.nr. 0766, inv.nr 34].

Period	Name
1647-1648	Gerardus a Romunde
1649-1650	Gerardus a Rumonde

1651-1655	Gerardus a Ruimondt (Ruimunde)
1658	Didericus a Ruimont
1659	Didericus a Romunde
1658	Arnoldus a Ruimont
1660-1663	Arnoluds a Ruimonde
1665	Arnoldus a Ruimondt
1662-1664	Theodorus a Ruimonde

Presumably printer Johan van Remunde married Eefse Ariaentsdr in Kampen in 1536. Namesakes had already settled in Kampen earlier. There are mentions of Kersten (1474), Jan (1480), Phillips (1481), and Johan (1489). In 1482 a Hendrik was also baptized. The father of the printers Hans and Christoffel wA probably born around 1455.

Venlo, Eindhoven or Keulen

Another option is that Hans (1) come from Venlo. His printing office was located in the 't Huys van Wachtendonck. It could then be a reference to Catharina van Meholt and Wachtendonk who was married to Martinus van Ruremunde <see chapter 9>. They had a son Johan who lived next door to his sister Trijn in 1533. However, the estimated years of birth do not match. The house may already have been called that when Hans acquired it. Another possibility is that both printers are the sons of Johan van Ruremunde (who was the son of Merten van Ruremunde and Lysbeth Mercator from Venlo. Little is known about this Johan. Not even whether he had children. It is no more than a theoretical possibility because there are no indications for it.

Because Christoffel sometimes calls himself Endoviensis, some researchers are looking for his origins in Eindhoven. As far as is known, no namesakes live in this city. If there is a connection with Eindhoven, it is more likely that he married there, perhaps because (the family of) his wife Lijnke lived there. No further indications have been found.

There is a good chance that both Hans and Christoffel studied in Cologne. The archive sources in this city are too fragmented to get a good picture of the blood relationships between the name bearers. There is a mention of a certain Christoff van Romunde in 1563. This first name is rare among namesakes from that time. But this Cologne resident was a roofer.

Deventer

Another clue to the origins of the two printers leads to Deventer. Around 1477 Richard Pafraet came from Cologne to Deventer to start a printing shop on the Lange Bisschopstraat. In 1483 Jacob van Breda started working in Deventer as the second printer. Partly due to the rise of the famous Latin school, Deventer became the most important printing centre in the Netherlands and Flanders. It was not until around 1517 that Antwerp took over this leading position. Pafraet's printing shop in the Lange Bisschopsstraat had a Van Romunde family as neighbours, whose descendants later formed the lineage of the mint masters. According to expert Miss Kronenberg, Pafraet's printing shop in the Lange Bisschopsstraat used a different smaller font for the capital letters "A" and "G" than usual. This same font was later also used by Christophorus Ruremundis. It therefore seems that there was contact between the two gentlemen. According to some, it is also argued that the cutting of coin dies by the mint masters and the cutting of letters for the printing press are related professions in terms of craftsmanship. However, it is unlikely that the printers acquired their craftsmanship in this way because the first mint master only started his profession in 1590 (in Zwolle).

If Johannes de Ruremunde, who enrolled at the University of Cologne in 1521, is the same person as Hans van Roermundt, then we know that he came from Deventer, because this is stated there. Also note the three Gelderland roses that are depicted in the coat of arms on the cover of the Bible. However, this does not necessarily mean that he was born there. If the cradle of the Bible printers was indeed in Overijssel, this fits in with the fact that the Lutheran faith took root in this province very early on. Several namesakes there were already Lutherans at that time.

The previously mentioned Hendrik, who was born around 1405, husband of Styne, was born in Deventer. Herman had four children, three of whom were sons (Deric, Andries and Johan). Herman had a son Herman who cannot have been the ancestor of the printers. It is not known whether Andries and Deric had children. There are several incidental mentions in Deventer that suggest that a branch is still missing from the family tree (see § 7.5.4). If so, one of the sons could have been the ancestor of the printers, given their estimated year of birth.

Zutphen of Doetinchem

A writer named John (2) Hulbusch (a generation later than Hans (1) and Christoffer) is said to have been born in Gelderland. This seems to point more in the direction of cities such as Zutphen and Doetinchem. However, the first namesakes in Doetinchem only lived there from 1600 onwards. These are the descendants of Jan van Romunde and Anna Schisters.

Namesakes had already lived in Zutphen earlier (see paragraph 8.1). Somewhere between 1476 and 1581, Joannes van Remund, husband of Elsgen de Lewensteyn, lived there. However, no children are mentioned in his will. The only candidate left is his brother Egbert van Remunde, who married Judoca. They possibly had two sons who, based on their year of birth, qualify as the ancestor of the printers. These are Philips and Gadert, husband of Marijken. However, it is uncertain whether they had children. Gadert could be the same person as Gottschalk Roremund who is mentioned in Antwerp in 1519.

Antwerp, 1519: The denominational Gottschalk Roremund even asks this question: "Didn't you learn the word of God for fear of being laughed at, and you and called Pharisee, a Jesuit, a hypocrite..." [2016, La Historia detrás del Nombre "Jesuitas"].

Berderen <Antwerp>, 13/03/1440: Heinric HAEC van Rueremonde, commits himself to stand up for the Magistrate. [Oudt Register mette Berderen, 1336-1439, p. 287 and A.A.B. Deel 29, blz. 252].

10.1.3 Other Believers in the Sixteenth Century

Many contemporaries in this century are beginning to have more and more liberal views on faith and increasingly challenge the Church's exclusive right in matters of faith. In addition to the printers from Antwerp, we also find name bearers elsewhere. Some interesting examples are presented below.

Daelhem, 1469: In 1469 lay brother Theodoricus van Ruremunde produced a vernacular manuscript for his fellow brothers in the Daelhem monastery. The Lay Brothers distinguished themselves from the regular canons in that they do not lead a religious life and were not received into the clergy. They did however take vows of chastity, poverty and obedience. The lay brothers' duties consisted mainly of housework and other physical labor.

"I Theodoric, a lay brother at Daelhem, who wrote this book for the comfort of all the brethren who read this or who it is being read ..." [Schreiber kolofon 147v + J.M. van Duijn 2014, Goed Woord gemeengoed].

Leiden, ??/03/1524: Jan Cornelisz. den leidekker <=aptronym for slater> speaks publicly about the faith in an unorthodox way. A councilor from 't Hof with secretary and bailiff travel to Leiden to investigate the case so that they can quickly eradicate these kinds of "false opinions". Jan is questioned after which he indicates that he was drunk and soon expresses regret.

"... On the first working day after last easter he went with Cornelis Evertsz. (his master) and with Adriaan (the foreman) to Warmond to work on the roof of the monastery there. At lunch time the host spoke with concern about what was happening in Germany, where the crooks thrown the chalices and the Holy host on the floor. Then Jan Cornelisz. asked: "what does it matter? Is the host more than a piece of bread? "And the monk again:" how dare you say it? It is God and man."

But the slater servant, like Philippus den kamerling, quote to the monk from the Scriptures, saying: "Saint Matthew says in the 24th: Beware of the false prophets, for they will say to you, Christ is there, so and do not go there. See, I told you this beforehand..."

After Jan Cornelisz. had told his story, he was severely punished. Jan was then so shocked that he fell on his knees to ask for forgiveness, promising that he would "do penance and from now on live like a Christian person". This apparently impressed his judges, who decided to extend his safe-conduct for 14 days to see if he would persist in his repentance. Jan then appeared again in the aldermen's room and repeated on his knees: "My lords, I am willing, if you please, to do my penance." The magistrate and aldermen thereupon conferred with the Dean of Rijnland (presumably because this was the first case of heresy they tried entirely independently) and delivered their verdict as follows:

"...Since our Mother, the Holy Church, does not despise sinners who repent, but has mercy on them in kindness, and there also the Dean and she herself are more inclined to mercy than to sternness, they condemn the guilty to show off on the scaffold in a cloth, depicting a chalice in front and behind, with a burning wax candle in his hand, barefoot and bareheaded; before going to St. Peter's where he must pray for the holy sacrament and offer the candle. The next day Jan, dressed in the same way, has to go for the crosses in St. Peter and a week later in St. Pancras and another week later in O. L. Vr. church, to finally take the walk through the city at the next procession general. Finally he must wear that chalice under his garment for a year, that he may be a warning to all not to blaspheme the Lord their God."

Five wax candles (supplied by the widow of soeten Dirck Steven) were needed to make Jan Cornelisz. Leydecker to correct his Lutheran views. [Knappert, Laurentius, 1863: Subjec De opkomst van het Protestantisme in eene Noord-the Nederlandssch stad. Geschiedenis van de hervorming binnen Leiden van den aanvang tot on het beleg.]

Utrecht, 1541: Another contemporary of the printers was the chaplain Herman Gerritszn. van Roermond (Herman van Remundt). Since 1536, Dirk van Abcoude, parish priest of the Geertekerk and rector of the Bartholomeus hospital in Utrecht, has been making reforms. He was very popular with his audience and thanks to the protection of the city patriciate he could go ahead. When Herman van Roermond established himself as the new chaplain (vice-pastor) of the Jacobikerk and vented new heretical ideas, Dirk saw his audience leave for Herman. As a result he articulated his reformational ideas even more sharply than before and a rivalry, arose between the two. In 1541 things therefore went wrong. The ecclesiastical court, in collaboration with the inquisitors, opened an investigation. The researchers had on problems in passing judgment on Herman because "that fool had let himself be looked into the sleeve for a long time". He was removed from office and could choose between being burned at the stake or banished for life. He opted for the latter and was never seen again in Utrecht. Dirk was also exiled (to Leuven), but later his sentence was partially reversed. He settled in the manor of Vianen and was appointed chaplain there by Reinoud 3 van Brederode. Until his death, Dirk would regularly stay in Utrecht as vicar of St. Peter's Church, where he served a private altar.

Also a contemporary was Henrich Schori von Remund, who lived in Antwerp around 1544. Presumably he was a Loist. Loisten are followers of Eloy (Loys) Pruystinck from Antwerp. They believe that the holy spirit is nothing but your own spirit. The soul is immortal, but the physical body is doomed. Original sin and hell do not exist according to them. The following source remains to be investigated further: [Nederlands Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, Volume 46, Nummer 2, 1964, pp. 155-168(14)].

Zaltbommel, ±1410 of 1450: Gravestone of Arnoldus van Roermonde and an unknown person in the Great- or Sint-Maartenskerk. <Detail gravestone with interpretation of the weapon shown on the right>. Left side is reminiscent of the original coat of arms of the lords of Herlaer. Herlaer was a fief of the Saint Lambert chapter in Liège. The cross symbolizes Archangel Michael. Several name bearers owned land near Herlaer in the 15th century. However, the cross can also be related to the coat of arms of the Teutonic Order. Marten van Ruremunde is a member of that order around 1476 in the commandery of Gemert and possibly the same Marten van Ruermunde and around 1489 worked in the commandery of Vught. In a record of 1454, Henrico son or Stephani de Rueremunda is mentioned in Gemert. The right side of the shield is difficult to interpret. It may be three Gelderland roses. That would be remarkable because in that case weapon is older than that of Herman v. Romunde who married Grieta and lived in 1494 in Deventer. Suppose Arnoldus lived to be 70 years old, then he might have been born in 1340. It may concern merchant Arndt, son of Johannes from Cologne (see § 4.2.1).

Asperen, 1412: From 's-Hertogenbosch (1968) and Heere (1956) pointed out that in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries the Asperense brothers from the monastery played an important role in the order of the Cross Brothers. They based this on the fact that almost every other year the Asperense prior was elected definitor (comparable to secretary-general) in the years 1413-1465, 1480, 1493-1503, 1519 and finally 1558-1562. In 1411/1412 the Asperense prior Johannes van Merten was even elected prior general and in this position the Pope John XXIII requested support to force unwilling priors to submit to the prior general and the general chapter. This would therefore imply that Van Merten was reform-minded. The Asperense monks were occasionally called in by the general chapter to promote observance in other monasteries. Like so Nicolas van Roermond in 1412 was sent to Hoei (in Belgium). Joannis van Roermond was mentioned in the same document. <A transcription of 1439 (see § 4.2.2) Nicolaas van Ruremund mentioned prior of the Mary monastery in Neuss. In 1467 Mathie van Remunde is Mentioned as son of Nycolai van Remunde in 's-Hertogenbosch (see § 5.3).

Asperen, 1457: Nicolaus de Ruremundis was cross brother of Asperen and moved to Hoya in 1412. In 1429 and 1434 he was definitor. In the general chapter of 1457 he was mentioned among the knights. [De orde van het heilig kruis in de vijftiende eeuw. P 29].

Annex: Genera that phonetically (a bit) sound like Roermond

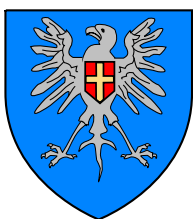

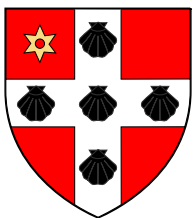

There are several family names that are not a toponym of the city of Roermond, but that sound phonetically somewhat alike. At the start of this study, gender segregation is not always clear in advance. In order to obtain a sharper demarcation, these sexes have been broadly investigated. In most cases it concerns genera that are a toponym of cities that resemble name variants of Roermond. This section provides a brief overview.

A. Aspremont

Aspremont is the name of a village in the French Alps. It is also the name of a family whose oldest record concerns Gosbert ler d "Aspremont. He was born around 1025 in France. Two of his great-grandchildren took the name "Romont". It is Albert de Romont and Thierry de Romont. It is not known if other Generations also used this family name. The first six Generations are shown in the figure below.

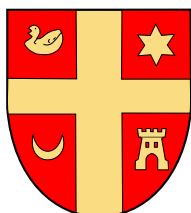

The Aspremonts have lived in various European countries such as Belgium, Germany, Austria and the Netherlands. The family is divided into the branches Aspremont and Lynden in the twelfth century. Gobert V of Aspremont was made duke by Louis the Saint; his descendants called themselves Prince and Earl of Aspremont, Amblise and Dun. One branch of the family was Reichsbaron in 1610 and Reichgrave in 1676. Eleven family branches are known, each of which has its own weapon. Next to this is the coat of arms of Joffroy d "Aspremont. This is the branch which also carries the name " Romont ".

It is known that the Aspremont-Lynden branch has relatives in the Netherlands and in Belgian. The coat of arms features the characteristic eagle in silver and the yellow cross on Lynde's red background. Herman van Aspremont-Lynden is a representative of this family. He was the son of Thiery van Aspremont-Lynden and Marie van Elderen. He was baron of Reckheim from 1590 to 1603. (= Rekem, is located on the Maas in Belgian Limburg not far north of Maastricht). Herman had exchanged Reckheim with Willem Quadt van Wijkdradt, who got his German possessions in return. Besides Baron van Reckheim, he also called himself Baron van Boorshem. He was also Baron van Rijckholt, Lord of Houtain-St. Simeon, Once-sur-Geer, Tongrenelle, Wanfercée-Baulet and Crenwyck. He was married with Marie van Hamal. Emperor Rudolf 2 (1576-1612) granted Herman all the old rights and privileges, including the right to mint. He also declared the barony hereditary in both the male and the female line. After his death in 1603, his son Ernestus, born in 1583, succeeded him as baron. On March 31, 1623, the free barony of Reckheim was elevated to imperial count by Emperor Ferdinand 2. In addition, the right to mint gold, silver and copper coins was also reiterated. Just like the imperial cities (including Deventer, Kampen and Zwolle) Reckheim was directly under the authority of the Holy Roman Empire. The empires fiefdom Rijckholt was also in the possession of the Count of Reckheim for some time since 10 January 1596. On this date he bought the manor from Willem van Vlodrop. Some time later it came back into the possession of the van Vlodrop family. Despite the small size of the county, they succeeded in flooding the Netherlands with mainly copper change. It mainly concerned imitations of coins from other regions. Because the appearance of the coins was copied, but not the content and weight, considerable profits could be made on this, to the disadvantage of other cities. However, little could be done about this because of the protection of the German Emperor. All this took place in the same period that the Van Romond family were Mint Masters in the north of the Netherlands (see further on in the text). The Mint Masters aren't related to Herman van Aspremont-Lynden. There are sources that suggest that the English Rosemont family is related to the Aspremonts. No indications were found for this hypothesis.

B. Gemonde

Gemonde is a village under 's-Hertogenbosch. There is no relationship with the Van Remondes. However, name bearers have lived in this village. The oldest record is from 18 June 1795 where Piet van Loon declared in front of the aldermen of Nuland that his 15 year old horse was missing and that he found it after a long quest in the stable of Bart van Remunt in Gemonde. [Schepenprotocol Nuland, Toegang 7342, inventaris 63, p. 1].

C. Moermond

The family Moermond comes to Zeeland. From 1600 until now, no relationship with the Lineageen named after Roermond can be demonstrated.

D. Ramondt, Raijmundus, Ramund and Ramunt

The names Ramondt (?), Raijmundus (5), Ramund (149) and Ramunt (14) do show some phonetic similarity with our family name, but are probably not related. This is probably a patronymic rather than a reference to Roermond. The name Ramunt occurs in one family as a corruption of Remunt. This name is common in South Holland, North Holland and Zeeland, but there does not seem to be any relationship with the genera that are a toponym of Roermond.

E. Romont

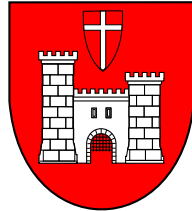

Romont is the name of two towns in Europe. One in France and one in Switzerland. The French town is located in Vosges (Lorraine). In Santes (about 450 kilometers northwest of Romont, France) lived between 1608 and 1645 Louis Romont, son of Pierre Romont. He was born and died on 30/10/1685 in Santes 1608. He married Marie de Maugre, was born around 1603 and died on 11/10/1683 in Santes. Louis and Marie had six children:

- Jacques Romont, born in 1630 in Santes.
- Jean Romont, 17/12/1634; died in 19/11/1693.
- Françoise Romont, 22/09/1637; died in 1695; married on 07/07/1662 in Santes, François Strain and died about 1709.
- Marie Romont, born 13/05/1640 in Santes.
- Albert Romont, born 14/06/1643.
- Antoine Romont, born in 1645 in Santes.

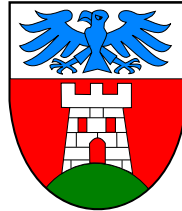

This family probably has no blood relationship with the Dutch name bearers. About 35 kilometers southwest of Bern (just below Freiburg) lies the town of Romont. Possibly the family "Von Romond" in the Canton de Vaud originated from this place.

F. Jacob Duke of Savoy-Vaud and Count of Romont (also Remont)

The depicted coat of arms is based on a canvas from around 1470. Jacob was married to his cousin Maria Françoise Louise of Luxembourg. He died in 1486, after which his wife remarried with Frans van Bourbon a year later. Maria died of old age in 1546. The daughter of Jacob and Maria married on 08/03/1503 with Hendrik 3, Count of Nassau, Lord of Brede and the Lek. On 2 May 1515 Hendrik 3 married again with Claudia de Chalon. She is the daughter of Jean 2 de Chalon, Prince of Orange and Philiberte of Luxembourg-Charny. In his third marriage (06/27/1524) he married with Mencia de Mendocça Y Fonseca 2nd marquise of Centette. She is the daughter of Rodriguez de Mendocça Y Lemos, 1st Marquis of Cenette and Maria de Fonseca Y Toledo. Mencia remarried in 1540 with Ferdinand of Aragon, Prince of Naples. From his second marriage Hendrik 3 inherits the title of Prince of Orange, from which later the royal family of the Netherlands arises. In 1984 a painting was made of the coat of arms, in honor of the 800th anniversary of 's-Hertogenbosch. The blue band with white circles has been replaced on that canvas by an alternation of straight white and blue surfaces. The caption is: "14th chapter of the Golden Fleece, escutcheon of Jacques de Savoy, Count of Romont, Baron of Vaux".

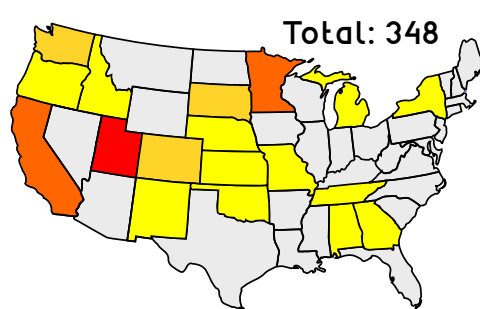

G. Remund (Zwitserland, USA)

A large family with the name "Remund" lives in Switzerland. According to an expert from the Schweizerdeutschen Wörterbuchs Idiotikon, this name is said to be a patronymic of Raymond. However, it seems more likely that it is a toponym of the Swiss Romont, which lies just southwest of Freiburg, where many of the Remunds live. According to Christoph Pfister [in: Die Ortsnamen der Schweiz] the German name for this place is "Remund".

The oldest record with the name Remund in Switzerland concerns Adelheid Remund. She is said to have been born in Bern in 1526 and died there in 1580. She married on 04/09/1543 in Bern with Sebastian Noll, born in 1515 as son of Anton Noll and Anna Hegger. Honor who was Sebastian married with Barbara von Luternau. He was governor of Erlach and died 1575 [Klaus H. Wachtmann, 2016: Wachtmann, Wilhelm Carl und Dortchen Grim – Vorfahren der Generation I-X]. Synonyms for Adelheid are: Aal(ke), Aaltje(n), Alyt, Aleid(a), Adelaida and Adele.

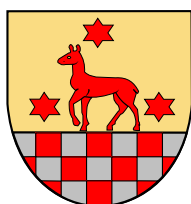

Another record concerns Claude Remund who was born in Lovatens in Switzerland. He had one daughter, Anteine Remond who married on 01/12/1566 in Moudon with Claude Dutoit. Her father had already died by then. On 20/12/1572 she married again in Moudon with Claude Porraz. Assuming Anteine was at least 20 years old when she married and her father was born about 25 years before his daughter, Claude must have been born before 1520.

G.1. Jacob Remund

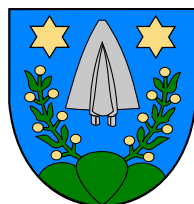

Most name bearers in Switzerland who live today are descendants of Jacob Remunds. Jacob was born around 1529 in Ferenbalm. Several families have different coat of arms. Some of these are shown below. One of his descendants emigrated to the United States. Their descendants still live there today. The descendants of Jakob Remund are shown in the following pages.

H. Roesmond, Roesmont, Roosemont, Roesemont and Rosemont (†)

The Roesmont genus occurs in 's-Hertogenbosch early in the 14th century. The first record is on 11/22/1314 of Elizabet the widow of Rodolfus lineage Rosemont (citizen of 's-Hertogenbosch). She then relinquished a section in the Cloth Hall that she kept in inheritance, for the Table of the Holy Spirit of 's-Hertogenbosch. Godescalcus dictus Rosemont who is alderman in 1315 is presumably their son. Other name variations of this genus are: Roes(e)mont and Roos(e)mont. The members of this family hold influential administrative positions. Many are employed as alderman, city secretary, city steward or notary. Some are merchants. A notable example is Rolof Roesmont, who in 1413 was appointed by the city council of 's-Hertogenbosch for a year as guardian of the Bossche trading settlement on the Danish peninsula of Schonen (Skåne in the south-west of Sweden). It is a rich family with many possessions, spread over the Meierij and beyond.

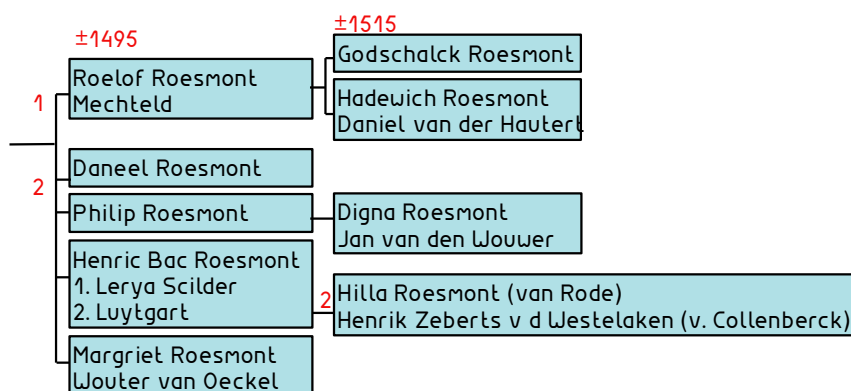

It is not known when the Roesmont family settled in (the vicinity of) 's-Hertogenbosch. Only in 1188, after Duke Henry of Brabant founded the new city of 's-Hertogenbosch, this area was given permanent residence. Already at the beginning of the 14th century, the Roesmonts have acquired a solid position in the city. Over the centuries various persons have been members of the "The illustrious dear lady brotherhood". This society was founded in the year 1318 in 's-Hertogenbosch in honor of Maria. Master Godschalck, who was born in Eindhoven around 1483, occupies a special place in family history. He went to study science in Leuven in 1499 and obtained his magister artium <PhD> there in 1502. In 1510 he was nominated by the O.L.V.-brotherhood for a benefit in the Bossche Sint Jan and since 1515 he was also canon of the Sint Petruskerk in Leuven. He also always resided in Leuven, where he had been professor of theology since 1515. As a judge he was partly responsible for the death sentence of several heretics and had a role in the prosecution of reformist book printers (see chapter 10 about the book printers of Antwerp). He probably did not do this with full conviction, because after his death in 1526 he was commemorated in a positive way by Erasmus. The Roesmont family is most likely extinct. The familie name still occurs in the United States of America and Canada, but there is no proof that these persons are descendants of the lineage from 's-Hertogenbosch. In the 1947 census, however, the names Roozmond (241x), Rozemond (70x) and Rosemund (6x) do occur. Whether these are blood relatives of the Roesmont family has not been investigated.

The transcription from 1416 below indicates son Roelof van Godscalck was conceived Katelijn, wife in Godscalck's first marriage. The spelling of the family name is Roermont instead of Roesmont. It presumably concerns an error in the transcription.

Bakel, 1416-1417: Hella Raessen and miss Mechtelt Poststeels widow Godscalck Roermont. Roelof Roermont son of Godscalk and Katelijn [B.P.R. 1190 (oud 17), folio 317v].

The family tree continues after Godscalck Roesmont and Mechtelden Posteels. This is shown in the following figure.

The original coat of arms of the Roesmonts or Rosemonts is according to A.H. Hoebe a rose without shell contour [Brabantse heraldiek in historisch perspectief]. The flower is very similar to the Gelderland rose as used centuries later by the noble family Van Romondt. Later also a double rose with an asterisk. No image of this is available, but this weapon may be very similar to that of the Rosemund family. since 1369 the coat of arms of the Roesmonts has changed into a (climbing) wolf on gold or on a silver shield [Armorial Général by J.B. Rietkamp]. It is possible that a climbing wolf was also fed on a golden shield (the drawing looks more like a fox). In 1427 Ghijsbrecht Roesmont carries a climbing lion as a seal of which unfortunately no image is available yet.

The name Roesmont is becoming increasingly rare in the 15th century. Between 1440 and 1450 the name Roesmont still occurs in the bailiffs accounts of the Mijerij. In the period 1454 to 1459 a few records have been found. Yet the influence of the family didn't completely disappeared. In 1461 Ghiselbertus Roesmont is mentioned as alderman in 's-Hertogenbosch. In April 1472 and 1476 one Ghijsbrecht Roesmont is still mentioned. The last record in the Netherlands is in 1672. The family tree is given below.

Although the Roesmont lineage in the strictly male line is not the ancestors of the Van Ruremonde lineage, this does not mean that there isn't blood relationship at all. Rolof Roesmont (Married with Mechteld) is the noble-great-grandfather (relationship in the 23rd bone) of Hendrika Sleutjes (Married with Johannes Martinus van Ruremonde). The relatively small group of descendants of this couple are thus related to Godescalcus.

I. Rougemont

According to some (vague) sources, the Roesmonts are related to the Rougemont. As yet no evidence or even an indication of this hypothesis has been found. Rougemont as a place occurs in a few locations. The place Rougemont in Québec in Canada (and Mont Rougemont) aside, there are four towns with this name:

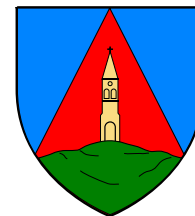

- It may be a reference to the village of Rougemont in Pays d'Enhaut in the commune of Vaud, high in the Alps. Assuming that the place's coat of arms would probably have been incorporated into the Roesmonds' coat of arms in one way or another, this option is dropped. The Roesmont family originally used a rose in their coat of arms (and later a climbing black fox).

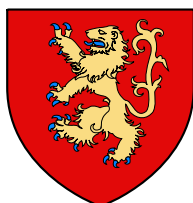

- Rougemont is a commune in the French department of Côte-d'Or (region of Burgundy). In this area there is also a Knight's Order: "Order of Saint George" or "Order of Rougemont". The Order had 27 noble knights. It derives its origin from the relic of Saint George brought by the founder from the Middle East, which was kept in a specially built chapel and was of importance to the Burgundian nobility because Saint George is the patron saint of knights. The order had been reformed in 1485, whereby it was stipulated that the members had to be able to prove 16 quarters, which means that all their great-great-grandparents had be of noble birth. The Order still existed during the reign of Louis XIV, who died in 1715, but probably disappeared in the 18th century, according to some, until 1824.

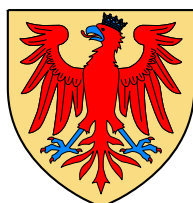

-Rougemont is also a commune in the French department of Doubs (region Franche-Comté). Close to Romagny-sous-Rougemont (Territoire de Belfort).

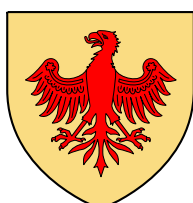

The following images of the Rougemont family crest can be found on the internet. The climbing lion could be related to that of the Roesmonts, but there are no real indications for this either.

J. Surmont, Surmond and Zuermont

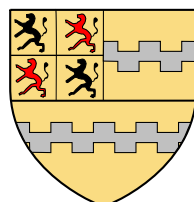

Also the names Surmont, Suermond and Zuermont show some phonetic similarity. Presumably, however, there is also no blood relationship. Surmont is a noble family that originated in 's-Hertogenbosch in 1581. The Meertens instituut indicates that these names are a French-speaking toponym of the villages Surmont of Surlemont. Examples are Surlemont at Ciney in the province Namen and Sur le Mont at Tilff in the province Liège. These are toponyms that can be translated as "on the mountain". It can also be a toponym of the Betuwe place name Zoelmond, which can be explained as "at the mouth of the Zoele". Locally this name is also pronounced as Soermond. The coat of arms of these genera are also very different from the coats of arms of the other genera in this document.

K. Reumont (Roumont)

According to Eugen Müller, the origin of this noble family in Wallonia lies in Roumont near Saint Hubert in the Ardennes. (And therefore not in Reumont, Northern France). The family is an old noble family that is already mentioned in the 9th century when the Count of Namur destroyed a 'house' de Reumont in a feud with Bishop John of Cambrai. The family owned properties in the Pays de Hasbaye (part of the Liège region). In the 14th century, knight Messire Gille de Reumont is mentioned as the owner of Septfontaines. His coat of arms consists of three red diagonal bars in a silver field with a blue tournoi collar. Johann von Reumont was the son of Ferry and Barbe de Francq and born in Belgium. According to some sources, he was married three times and according to other sources twice, although his marriage to Philbert d'Awans remains unmentioned. He was city commander of Münster, general sergeant and Colonel. He worked in city commander in Münster for about 35 years. He was knighted imperial in 1649 and then used a modified coat of arms.

A certain Jan Reumont was once a member of the Illustrious Brotherhood of Our Lady Marie. For him, an overdue death debt is paid in de years 1495, 1497 and 1500 [Rekeningen Illustre lieve vrouwe Broederschap, tgs.nr. 1232, inv.nr. 123, 051r + 160r + 340v (BHIC)].

L. Weremund, Weremond(e), Wu(e)rmon(d)(t), Warmon(d)t and Wedemondt

The following names also occur in 's-Hertogenbosch: Weremund (1628), Weremond(e) (1574-1854), Wurmond (1764), Wurmunt (1679-1797), Wuermont, Wu(e)rmond(t) (1672-1747 and 1665), Warmont (1778), Warmond(t) (1743), Wedemondt (1589), Homont (1586). Warmond (see coat of arms on the left) is a place just above Oestgeest. L'Homond is a town about 150 kilometers east of Bordeaux in France. No evidence of kinship has been found.

M. Ruehrmund

The genera Rührmund and Ruehrmund occur in Germany and the United States. The origin of these names could refer to the Ruhr, a tributary of the river the Rhein in Germany or they could be toponyms of Roermond. Both Rürmund and Rührmund are old German spellings for the city of Roermond. Ruermund was also used in the German language area to indicate the fourth quarter of Gelre.

There are no records dating from before 1760. This could be explained by the bombings in World War 2, which resulted in the loss of much of the archive material in Germany. Of the limited digital availability of online archives in Germany could be the reason. However, if it was a common family name in the past, it may be assumed that there are at least some older references.

Since these old records are lacking, it is likely that George is one of the first persons to call himself by this surname. He named his son Phillip and it was customary to name your first son after your father. The father of George could therefore be named Phillip van Rueremund or Ruremunde and should have been born around 1730. Philip is rarely seen as a given name, in combination with the toponyms of Roermond. In 's-Hertogenbosch the name Philip is used once in 1463 (Lysbeth Philips daughter of Remunde). In Kampen (1481) and Zutphen (1484) Phillips van Ruermonde is mentioned a few times and in 1617 a certain Philippus von Ruremundt was baptized in Moers. All of these entries are more than 100 years older than the hypothetical year of birth of George's father.

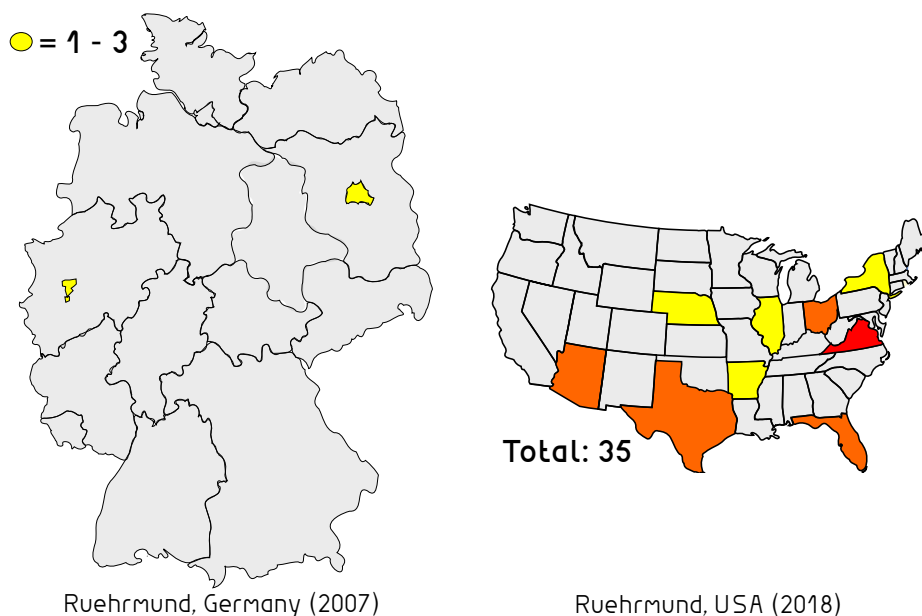

Another approach is to look at which families migrated at that time from within the Holy Roman Empire from the Netherlands to the East (the nowadays Germany). For instance Henricus Romunde who was born around 1725 and married Maria Catherina Swinnen. They had twin sons, Wilhelm Maximilian Romunde (born in Hünshoven) and Guilemus Maximilian Romunde (and later on two daughters and two other sons). But the given name Philips does not exist in his family. Another person is Henricus Romunde who was born about 1640 in the area of Bocholt. It is not known whether his children had descendants and therefore no given names of descendants are known. However he lived about 500 kilometers (beeline) from Eckartsberga, so a direct relationship is not plausible.

This family name is very rare in Germany. There are a few entries in Berlin and a few in Wuppertal. Many more records can be found in the United States of America because some of the family had emigrated to in the 19th century. In a few cases the name is spelled as "Ruerhmund", whereby the letters "r" and "h" are interchanged. In this variant, the letter "h" is sometimes also omitted (see: Rutger, Ermgard, Wilhelmine Louise and Friedrich Daniel Ruermund).

In the early 19th century, several persons of the Ruehrmund family migrated from Germany to the United States. Now this name is frequently used there. In 2007 there were only 2 records of this name in Germany (1 in Mettmann and 1 in Berlin).

The surname of Freidrich Wilhelm Ruehrmund who married Jeanette is sometimes spelled as Rührmund. The German punctuation mark the umlaut is not known in English and did not appear on the first typewriters. The first emigrants to the USA switched to a phonetic spelling without the umlaut. It is plausible that the genera Rührmund and Ruehrunde are mutually related.

The distribution data in Germany is from 2007 [<http://www.verwandt.de>]. The ones from the USA are from 2018 [www.namespedia.com]. Two family trees have been developed. George Ruehrmund's line of offspring is well substantiated and checked. Freidrich Wilhelm Ruehrmund's line was compiled by merging various internet sources. The latter family tree is more unreliable due to the lack of primary sources.

M.1. Progenitor George Ruehrmund x Elizabeth Engerlandt (± 1755)

George Ruehrmund was born in Eckartsberga in 1760. He married Marie Elizabeth Engerlandt. They probably had two sons. The existence of the son Ernst is uncertain. The other son, Phillip Ferdinand Ruehrmund (1783/1846) was a shoemaker in Eckartsberga, Saxony-Anhalt, Germany. He was married with Johanna Rosina Zachman (1783/1841). Phillip Ferdinand emigrated at the age of 59 with his wife Johanna Rosina Zachman, his daughters Amelia (26), Renate Rosetta Ruehrmund (22) and his youngest son Ferdinand Christian Ruehrmund (16). His eldest son August William had already emigrated a year earlier. The ship Barque Virginia, departed from Bremen in March 1841 and arrived in Baltimore, Maryland on 06/26/1841. However, the journey did not go well. Rosina died at sea at the age of 58 and Phillip Ferdinand became fatally ill. He may have been married afterwards with Maria WoFerd and/or with Rosa Gahn.

Their eldest son August Frederick emigrated to the United States of America in 1839. August Ruehrmund was born on 01/09/1808 in Eckharzberga in Elsass in the then kingdom of Preusse (Germany). On 01/01/1833 he married Rosina Karolina Grosch. On 13/06/1839 he left Germany with his wife and children. She also landed in Baltimore. In 1 October 1839 she arrived in Richland Township Marion without any possessions. There he went to live in a wooden house and bought 40 hectares of land. Together they worked the land. He became a furniture maker. About a year after settling in Richland, he received a message that his parents, two sisters and brother had followed him across the sea. During the trip his mother died and his father was fatally ill. For that reason, he insisted to go to Pittsburg. Later Frederick received a message that his wife was sick too, but that she insisted continued to go to Pittsburgh to help his family. Since he had no money, he borrowed $ 10 from the pastor and went on foot. He left the care for his wife to the neighbors. When he got to Wooster he was advised to go to Steubenville and from there take the boat to Pittsburgh. But once arrived in Steubenville, it turned out that no boats left because of the low water. This was a serious setback for him. When he finally arrived in Pittsburgh, his father turned out to be in good health. The return journey was long, but went smoothly. On 1 September 1890 his wife died at the age of 57. August died on 25 March 1897.

N. Rührmund

The name Rührmund appears in the archives for the first time in 1343 in Untertürkheim (Stuttgart). Albrecht Rührmund (alias Rüemunde) is a winegrower. He had a family crest without being ennobled. Charles IV would be the first emperor to allow family coats of arms without elevating the person to nobility. Two versions of Albrecht's coat of arms are known (see the two figures on the left). A six-pointed star appears in both scenes. In the first as a helmet mark and the second on the shield. The (current) coat of arms of Untertürkheim also contains a six-pointed star. The star is yellow or gold coloured in a blue field [www.heraldrysinstitute.com/lang/de/cognomi/Rührmund/Germany].

The name Rührmund is still abundant and fairly widespread in Germany in 2008 with about 64 records. The highest concentration is in Berlin and the surrounding area. In about 1805 some persons bore the name Rührmund as well as Ruehrmund, suggesting that both names had the same origin. In 1878, a name bearer settled in Lillyfontein South Africa. Possibly there are still descendants to be found there.
